SPECIAL SECTION

Annual Report of the College, 1985-86

If humankind ever was innocent, or naive, that characteristic has been burnt away in the crucible of the twentieth century, and I find myself in my particular cultural milieu, as a product of this century, with considerable skepticism about the general goodwill of our human society.

AUSCHWITZ

When I visited Auschwitz-Birkenau, I felt the guilt that most people feel there, and tried to express it in a letter. Auschwitz meant the incomprehensible death of individuals for an all too comprehensible ideology. The letter wasn't written to anyone in particular; it was written mainly to re-orient myself, through words, in what then seemed the moral desert of my own age. As I say in the letter, if this could happen, and continues to happen, what does it mean for humanity? I've taken most of the letter and adapted it into a statement.

BY WILLIAM A. WOOD '86

Auschwitz is the concentration camp in what is now southwestern Poland where four million people from all over Europe, three million of them Jews, were gassed, shot, starved, tortured, experimented upon, and turned into ashes. We spent four hours there, which wasn't enough.

We arrived at the original Auschwitz part of the camp on a clear Friday morning. Auschwitz is a Germanization of the Polish town name Oswiecim. The parts of the later, much larger camp, called Birkenau, are about three kilometers apart from the small, original camp of Auschwitz. Both were later referred to simply as Auschwitz. Unlike Mauthausen in Austria and Dachau in Germany, which I had visited earlier, all of the buildings at the original part of Auschwitz were made of brick, and not destroyed by the Nazis before their retreat. The camp is one hundred acres at most.

We began by walking through the main gate, with the overhead inscription the same as at Dachau: "Arbeit mach frei"—Work Brings Freedom. In the first building we entered, there was an explanation of how the camp originally started as an interment facility for what the Germans termed 10,000 "political" Polish prisoners, begun after their Blitzkrieg invasion of Poland in 1939. Inside was a symbolic urn full of ashes, perhaps the ashes that would have been produced from several individuals, representing the four million.

That was not new for me; I had gone through an attempted contemplation of "this" in Israel, when we went to Yad Vashem, the museum of the Holocaust, in Jerusalem—the last time I had sobbed. Now, though, it was not pictures and words; it was the bloody soil where it happened, where those ashes of four million of the eleven million of the Holocaust still lie, soaked into the earth. More than at Yad Vashem, and more than at Mauthausen or Dachau, I was walking into what it means to be a member of the humankind of the twentieth century that could do this to itself.

Before the Nazis withdrew in their retreat from the Red Army, who liberated the camp in early '45, they wanted to destroy all the evidence of their activities at the camp. Several warehouses of the confiscated clothing, articles, and personal items of the gassed millions were burned, but a small portion remained when the Russians arrived. We walked into the next building, where this small portion was exhibited. Behind a glass case thirty feet long and six feet high was two tons of human hair, cut from corpses to make cloth and filling for mattresses and pillows. At this point most of us were numb, although a few tears had begun to appear. I did not cry; it was already inside me. Upstairs were approximately 60,000 pairs of men's and women's shoes, and a separate case with several thousand pairs of very small shoes. Another wall of glass contained thousands of confiscated pairs of glasses; another thousands of hair brushes, tooth brushes, shaving brushes. Many people were crying by now—though most quietly. The tour guide spoke of having given this tour to Charles DeGaulle, Willy Brandt, Gerald Ford, John Paul II, and others and watching them cry. One of us wandered over to a small case against a wall and found an infant's dress and shoes, and sobbed and choked, and one of us held his hand.

In the next building were pictures, letters, descriptions of the successful completion of the camp's enlargement from the camp commander, Rudolf Hoess, written to the chief of the SS, Himmler. On one wall was a picture of the 162 children freed at the time of the camp's liberation—all that had survived of the more than 500,000 children that had come there. They had survived because they were twins, because they were wanted by the camp doctor, Dr. Joseph Mengele, for experiments—for changing (trying to change) the color of eyes and hair, for cripplings and distortions, for endurance tests. As we stood before this picture, as big as the wall, our tour guide spoke of the first two closest faces. In January 1985, many of these survivors returned to Auschwitz to remember the 40th anniversary of the liberation of the camp. The guide asked us to imagine the feelings and faces, as best we could, of the twin brothers, now living in Chicago, as they looked at themselves in this picture after forty years. She told us of a woman pointing to herself in the picture and sobbing: "Who am I? What is my name? . . . Tell me who I am." I had been, as I said, numb until then, mostly because the fact of "this" has been internalized in me since my trip to Israel. This description by our guide was new, and at this point I was blinded by tears, though silent ones. We walked to a courtyard, walled off between two of the buildings, and saw a memorial against the far wall.

This was the "punishment" bloc. Against this wall 20,000 prisoners were individually shot throughout the history of the camps, most of them by three special sergeants of the SS. Our guide described how John Paul II had knelt and prayed for a long while against the wall. We saw a pole with a large hook, perhaps six feet off the ground, from which prisoners were hung by their bound wrists behind their back for hours. We entered the penal building, going to the cellar where the individual punishment cells were. The cell in which Fr. Maximillian Kolbe died was there, now (last year) canonized, with one of the five Easter candles laid in Poland by the Pope inside. After an escape from the camp, prisoners from the escapee's bloc were rounded up and a confession of the person's accomplice demanded. When none was forthcoming, a prisoner was selected at random for torture. When this had happened in Kolbe's block, he stepped forward and said, "Take me instead." When asked who he was, he replied, "A Catholic priest." He was put in a cell two meters on a side with no light for twelve days, without food and water. When still alive on the twelfth day, he was injected in the heart, and died. Other cells included the "standing punishment cells"—one meter on a side, with a two-foot door at the bottom and otherwise sealed, in which four men stood (in this one square meter) all night, after working during the day, until they died. The point of the torture cells was to make it known in the blocs that if someone escaped, others would suffer and die for it . . .

From this building we headed, mostly quiet and blankly listening to our guide, to see several railroad rails across three poles, which served as a continually-functioning public gallows. From there we went to the crematorium, a small one—built for this small, original part of the camp. Outside was a well, from which Hoess was hanged after the war. Inside the mostly bunkered, underground crematorium was a fake shower into which Cyclon B was dropped and 900 people gassed every twenty minutes. The exit doors led shortly and directly to the ovens, where the corpses were carried by a few prisoners selected out from the shower group beforehand, who were then, after their work, shot by the SS and taken care of by the next incoming selected group. On one of the ovens, along with heaps of flowers, was laid the proclamation of C.A.N.D.L.E.S.—the group of children who survived, and who had returned last January. There was a vindictive, understandable (funny word here, it seems—as if anything in our world now is understandable) pledge to not rest until Dr. Mengele, who was then believed alive in Paraguay, is caught, along with promises not to let the world ever forget what happened here. And in the rest of the world, a professor at Northwestern University writes a book saying the Holocaust is a hoax and never happened. From there we took the bus to Birkenau.

A small parking lot, a few large brick buildings; an apparently endless field of brick chimneys. An hour and a half of wandering over trails, fields, other things, that bring water to my eyes as I write this. The train tracks passing under the guard house at the entrance of Birkenau, the camp at least a square mile in size, probably larger. I walk the long road from this entrance to the end of the train tracks, where the selections platforms are. Ninety percent of the prisoners were sent directly to crematoriums 1 and 2 on either side of the end of the tracks, told they were taking a short rest stop to take showers and change trains, handed little pieces of soap to avoid general panic. The other ten percent, judged capable of hard labor, were waved in the other direction, to the barracks that stretched endlessly. I walk down the road following the tracks and come to the end, where there is a memorial laid out over the 100 meters or so between the rubble of the two main crematoriums. The crematoriums are now piles of collapsed concrete. One can still see their shape, and the stairs, leading up from the underground gas-shower chambers to the furnaces, where the smokestacks used to be. Lots of grey bricks among the rubble. The monument is in fifteen or so languages, of all the countries from which people were shipped in cattle cars for “resettlement.”

I walk to the memorial at the end of the road. There are very few people visiting today. Looking down the road I see a three-inch piece of barbed wire. I pick it up, thinking to myself that I should keep it, for some reason, perhaps to remember, perhaps to see every day; then thinking it should stay there, it belongs there. Not really sure what I should do with it, I simply pocket it. I will decide what to do before I leave. Walking beyond the memorial, among the ruins of crematorium number 1, no one around, I see the rear boundary of the camp with its twelve-foot double fence of electrified barbed wire, the same as around the smaller original part of Auschwitz. Farms beyond . . . I wonder what it would be like to work all day in fields next to this. Would one think or simply, easily, block it out? I see the places where the barbed wire was rolled off the cement posts and left in piles, at liberation, forty years ago, and think that my small piece wouldn't be missed. Then I see a guard tower, still with broken glass and door on hinges: The whole place has been left as it was found, without any of the additions or alterations or museum-making of Dachau and Mauthausen. Carefully I enter the guard house, expecting to find bones or ash or something; simply decaying wood, some extra glass insulators for the electric fence laying scattered about. I walk along this back boundary, not being able now to see the huge stretches of the camp behind me and its divisions, with double fences, into sub-camps, but seeing the rows and rows of chimneys left over from the more than 300 wooden barracks that no longer stand. As I walk through this slightly wooded section, I find more guard towers, then come upon some buildings, and written descriptions. All writing is in Polish, Russian, English, and French—and none in German, except what was originally on a few parts of buildings. I come upon huge brick circular structures, basins in the ground, half-full of putrid green water, above-ground circles of bricks; explanations that the Nazis wanted to make “driving gas here from human excrements.” Ground grey everywhere—Is it ash? Is it normal? Am I safe here? Is this really over? Isn't it going on right now? Chimneys in the distance spilling out black smoke—those aren't factories, those are crematoriums. Am I going crazy here? Numb, I walk with a stumble to a pool of water.

One of us wandered over to a small case against the wall and found an infant's dress and shoes, and sobbed and choked, and one of us held his hand.

The water is green here too, marshy, an irregular pond, full of thousands of disgusting, chirping frogs. There are pilings, almost completely decayed, in the pond. This is where human ashes from crematoriums 3 and 4 were dumped. If I were to wade in, it would not be mud, it would be ash. I cannot sob, or even cry, and in fact have to keep pushing myself, sending darts, to remember that death is here at all. Am I simply performing pathetic self-psycho numbing? This is the land where persons died, where millions of persons died, where persons were coldly, rationally, brutally murdered by the thousands per day, and I am stumbling around unable to feel anything. I still have my piece of barbed wire, and am alone, as I have been, and hope simply that I will come to bring this to some part of me before I leave, but not knowing how. I begin to walk down the road at the far end of the camp, toward the commandant's quarters. To my right the field stretches across, rows of chimneys and foundations, to the railroad tracks on the far side. Side roads stretch to my right between the rows of barracks. I want to walk down this road although I know I should already be back at the bus. Why are we so constrained by a schedule? Just leave me here, then, I think; I'll get back; I'm not ready to go yet.

A strange looking tank of some sort, on brick supports, twenty feet off the ground, draws my attention. I wander towards it, and then head down this road between rows of barracks, towards walls of brick, which would have formed a courtyard between two former wooden barracks buildings. This is a punishment bloc, a place to shoot people from the few that worked and survived more than a few days. Something on the ground, a piece of trash I suppose. Then I stop, and take several steps back. It's not a piece of trash . . . it's a piece of cloth. It is almost completely rotted, pushed down in the grass and overgrown. As I pull it up, it tears and is shredded. It is cloth, it has stripes, barely discernible through the dirt and decay of forty years in a field. Stripes of gray and blue.

I've found a piece of a uniform. Someone wore this, probably died in it. This is not some empty field of ruins, where people centuries ago were killed. I am crying fallen on the ground. This cloth was on someone, and they are dead. And this whole, huge field is real. Four million people. And it was yesterday. Now it is in me forever. I walk to the brick walls of the former courtyard, alone in this huge field, and take out my piece of barbed wire and jam it into the wall, and hang the piece of death uniform on it, and cry, for humanity. I am thinking: that I am not doubting if there is a God—that is a different question for me, in a different place. I am thinking: Is there hope for humanity, at all? This isn't just here, it's in Chile, and Iran, and Cambodia, and Guatemala, and God-knows-where-else, and it's this very second, as I stand here and cry and know that forty years ago here where I'm standing people had their heads blown off and four million mothers, fathers, grandparents, brothers, sisters, and children died. Evil didn't win here . . . it was stopped; but it hasn't stopped in my world, and life seems very meaningless indeed. I am hollow, with an endless echo, and endless scream.

I know I am late now, and am walking directly over the cement foundations of wooden buildings instead of down the road between those rows of barracks. I find, then, a pile of tiles surrounding one chimney, and know this was the "camp hospital," for experiments. And I keep going and find old styrofoam plates, used, I think, to feed freed inmates after the liberation. And I walk slowly, and can never forget. Walking between the tracks, people yelling at me for being late. How can they yell here? Why didn't they just leave without me? Climbing onto the bus, with people mad at me, and being exhausted, and not caring, and wanting to sit forever and cry. [R]

This may be the heart of your liberal arts education: the ability to entertain contradictory ideas simultaneously.

DOUBLE VISION

Commencement address delivered by Barbara Harrell Carson on May 25, 1986

I have to tell you at the outset that I'm of two minds about this arrangement. There's something troubling about it, isn't there—with us up here, you down there; me talking, you silent? Symbolically, it's wrong. It doesn't reflect the shifting roles we've had during your time at Rollins; it blurs the fact that often we've been students to your teaching. It belies the conversation you've been having with all of your professors for the last four years. Maybe—to correct the symbolic distortion of this ceremony—I should follow my occasional classroom practice and divide you into groups, give you newsprint and markers, and send you out to the parking lot to work on your own ideas about your leaving us today.

On the other hand, I must admit that I love all of the trappings and traditions associated with graduation. They connect us with centuries of other such ceremonies, reminding us of our unity with those who have gone before us in similarly strange outfits, and suggesting our part in a line of learners that will curve into the future. In that sense, this arrangement—with its origins in history (and it's reflection of an actual hierarchy of experience and authority)—strikes me as perfectly fitting.

And this fact—that one event can call up such a double response and that both responses can be true: this ceremony is symbolically a distortion and symbolically appropriate—can serve as a handy metaphor for the idea I'd like to talk about today. I said I was of two minds about this arrangement. So, too, I urge each of you, as you leave Rollins, to go out with at least two minds blazing. You all know that old perceptual test involving a drawing which you see alternately as a vase and as the profiles of two women. Metaphorically speaking, I hope that at Rollins we've taught you to see, at the same time—in defiance of psychological truisms—both the vase and the profiles. In fact, this may be the heart of your liberal arts education: the ability to entertain contradictory ideas simultaneously. If we've done our jobs right—you and we—what the liberating arts may have freed you from is too narrow a definition of reality. You will have learned to be at ease with ambiguity.

It may seem, however, as if we've spent most of our time developing in you just one way of thinking. Starting from some concrete knowledge, you've zeroed in on problems, attacking them by winnowing out the extraneous, discovering X by discarding everything that is not X. You've analyzed, dissected, contrasted, classified. I've had you pull lists of images out of short stories, tear themes away from novels, rip metaphors out of poems.

In setting these exercises we have followed the guidelines of our civilization with its dualistic, either-or vision. Because of our Greek heritage, we tend to see life—all of us—as neatly divided into the good and the bad, the true and the false, the beautiful and the ugly, the living and the dead, past and present. In science, reality has been partitioned into the observed and the observer; mind and matter. In social relations, we think of our family, religion, nation, on the one hand; and the stranger, the heathen, the foreigner, on the other.

Perhaps the message we've often conveyed in our assignments is that dualistic objectivity is the most commendable intellectual attitude. And, indeed, this way of dealing with reality has had many happy consequences. It has made possible the conquest of polio and has sent the Voyager II space probe past Uranus. It will allow you to whip out a brief in your law practice; to distinguish a kidney from an aorta in the operating room; to decide which presidential candidate to vote for and which stock to invest in.

There are, however, a couple of problems with such an approach to life. One is that by the rules of dualism, objectivity can be achieved only by separating the perceiver from whatever is under analysis. We can only know X if we are not X. Therefore, whatever the prize won in this intellectual game, it always comes wrapped in alienation. We have learned, for example, to be skillful manipulators of nature, but we are strangers now in the natural world that has ceased to feel like our home.

A second problem with a purely dualistic mind is that by simplifying life into an either-or proposition, we overlook the greater whole whose truth includes both opposing poles—which can no more be separated than the positive and negative ends of a magnet.

Analysis has taught you to take things apart. The double vision I wish for you will remind you that while taking things apart is a fine way to solve some puzzles, others—like the jigsaw—can be solved only by putting things together.

And while we've been training you to analyze, we have actually been teaching you this other way of thinking, too. Some of the voices you've heard hinting the value of this second approach have come from your study of science—which may have seemed the unlikeliest source of all. But you live, not in the simple Newtonian world of either-or science, but in the world where Einstein and Heisenberg and Bohr and Schroedinger have knocked down barriers between concepts once regarded as opposites. So you've learned to think of mass and energy as the same reality, to believe that a body can be both in motion and at rest at the same time, to conceive of space and time as equivalent. It demands the composure of an

Alice in Wonderland not to become dizzy in the face of modern science's contradictions—that-are-not-contradictions. How can subject and object be one, as Erwin Schroedinger has declared? How can a single electron go through two holes in a screen at the very same instant ("more than a ghost can do," Sir Cyril Burt said)? Is it significant of a larger reality that if you tear off a piece of holographic negative and shine a laser beam through it, you get not a picture of a part of the hologram, but the whole image? Could it be—as the physicist David Bohm suggests—that throughout nature parts are encoded with the image of the whole? That would make a part contain the whole as surely as the whole contains the part in our present conception.

And can we ever ultimately divide part from a whole as our old dualism taught us? Since everything—you, I, this lectern, this air—is made up of space with here and there some atomic particles thrown in, how precisely can we determine where the edge of this system I call me ends and the edge of that system you call you begins?

It's probably no secret to you that what I find attractive in these ideas is not the scientific facts—which I've no doubt mucked about in very awkwardly—but the metaphors science offers for the vision of reality that can see individual parts without ignoring the whole where opposites meet.

I am becoming more and more convinced that this is the message that the greatest of our literature has always been giving us—that there is no single answer to any question worth asking, that truth often lies in the meeting of contraries. The paradox of Shakespeare's "Fair is foul and foul is fair" delights us because we sense that its truth extends beyond the political and moral confusion of Macbeth's Scotland.

American literature, certainly, is filled with warnings of the danger of viewing life as if it were a mouse to be dissected or a mathematical equation to be solved, leading to one answer. Nothing destroys people faster than single vision. We see it leading to self-destruction in Hawthorne's Young Goodman Brown, who goes to his grave a "stern, . . . sad, . . . distrustful, if not desperate man" because he falls for the Devil's sermon that "Evil is the nature of mankind" and ignores the duplex reality around him. In Henry James' Daisy Miller, a similar myopia on the part of the character Winterbourne results in the death of Daisy. We can't quite forgive Winterbourne his compulsion to stick a label on the young American girl: is Daisy innocent or a flirt or a coquette or a fallen woman? We hate him for his feeling of "final relief" when he concludes that her "ambiguity . . . and the whole riddle of her contradictions had grown easy to read"—and he reduces her to "a mere black little blot." We are troubled, too, by how the world views J. Alfred Prufrock in T.S. Eliot's poem, fixing him "in a formulated phrase," leaving him—like a bug in a display case—"formulated, sprawling on a pin," failing to see that wimp is only a part of a self that includes tragic hero, too.

So our literature constantly pushes us to entertain the possibility that good and evil, innocent and calculating, failure and hero can reside within one skin. It reminds us too that other truths lie in paradox. Simon and Garfunkel—not bad poets, sometimes—helped us remember us that "one man's ceiling is another man's floor." But what even better poets teach us is that sometimes the ceiling and the floor may be the same for the same person. This is Melville's message when he has Ahab declare in his final enlightenment: "Oh, now I feel my topmost greatness lies in my topmost grief." Or another example: we learn in The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn that Jim is most free—at his most triumphant—when he voluntarily forfeits his physical freedom to get a doctor for the wounded Tom Sawyer, an act assuring Jim's return to slavery. We learn in Hemingway's The Sun Also Rises that Jake and Brett and Michael—people who seem free of economic, societal, and moral restraints—live the most constricted of lives. Afraid to suffer any more after the war, they can never really love. Because love and suffering turn out to be the opposites—the ceiling and floor—that must always be experienced as one.

While I am urging you to develop a double vision of life, let me point out three things that I don't mean to imply in this challenge. First, I don't want you to abandon your analytical skills. In most of your business of living, this will be the approach you will take—because you do live inside of our society, inside of time, inside your own skin. Nor do I mean to suggest that opposites are actually identical. To say that the waterfall is inextricably involved in the stream is not to say that the waterfall and the stream are the same. And finally, I do not mean to imply that you should go through life thinking that any act or belief is as good as any other. This kind of trivializing toleration is as far from the dynamic tension of opposites I speak of as I can imagine.

But what's in all this for you? If you manage to keep in sight both the vase and the profiles, how will your life be different from the lives of those with only one way of seeing? It seems to me a sure bet that yours will be richer than theirs in at least three ways: in the pleasure you will find in the search for truth; in creativity; and in community.

Because it teaches humility, finding no easy or simple answer to any real question, this approach to reality locates the joy of life in the quest, not in the conquest. Emerson spoke from this understanding when he said: "Were I to hold the truth in my hand, I would let it go for the positive joy of seeking." Behind this is a recognition that part of the goal of life is, not solving its mysteries, but rediscovering its mystery, feeling its wonder.

A second result of this holistic vision is the increased potential for creativity. Creation occurs at the meeting place of contraries; it rises out of the risk that comes from exposure to differences—whether that opposition is an idea and a piece of marble that will become Michelangelo's Moses; or conflicting experiences and beliefs that collide during Rollins' Difference and Dignity Week, awakening new attitudes; or the old agrarian South and new industrialism meeting at the crossroads in the 1920s and stimulating the amazing renaissance of southern literature.

The third benefit I see lies in community. Cultivation of this double vision can help rescue you from the chilling isolation of our modern lives. It can make you less willing to approach personal relationships as an either-or matter. My favorite expression of this idea is in Eudora Welty's The Robber Bridegroom. In this novella, the planter Clement Musgrove speaks of the highwayman with whom his daughter has gone to live:

If being a bandit were his breadth and scope, I should find him and kill him for sure . . . But since in addition he loves my daughter, he must be not the one man, but two, and I should be afraid of killing the second. For all things are double, and this should keep us from taking liberties with the outside world, and acting too quickly to finish things off.

Welty knows that such a vision can lead us "not to point the finger in judgment but to part a curtain, that invisible shadow that falls between people, the veil of indifference to each other's presence, each other's wonder, each other's human plight."

In larger relationships, the lived recognition of the simultaneous truths of our individuality, on the one hand, and our involvement in the whole web of existence, on the other, could revolutionize our dealings with society and with nature. The line of people holding hands across America today will make visible the growing acknowledgment of our reciprocal and inescapable interdependence. Chernobyl has reminded us of the illusion of national boundaries; every line on the map that separates countries is also the point of their meeting—for good or for ill. To work for a new community based on the fellowship of life, cutting across economic and national boundaries and across the barriers that appear to separate us from our environment—this can no longer be the business merely of sentimentalists and saints. If we are to survive, it must be our work too.

For those who master this double vision, there will be another kind of community, as well: a vivid awareness of temporal continuity. It will be based on the recognition that while we live in our time, we also live in eternity; that our present was someone else's future and will be—if we don't blow it—the past of yet others. As William Faulkner said: "Yesterday today and tomorrow are is: indivisible: one." To acknowledge our place in this chain—with its exhilarating and terrifying responsibilities—is to know the potential for creativity that lies at the nexus of opposites.

This paradox—of our simultaneous existence in two times—is very much with us today, when an ending and a beginning meet for all of us. We know that it is true that you will leave us now, but we know with equal certainty the truth of what Walt Whitman said, in that section of Song of Myself that seems to me dedicated to the relationship between teachers and students. He speaks of his "students" as swimmers he has trained, ready now to leave the safety of the shore, ready to prove the success of their teacher by not needing that teacher any more. His words could come from each of your professors today:

I am the teacher of athletes,
He that by me spreads a wider breast than my own proves the width of my own,

I am becoming more and more convinced that this is the message that the greatest of our literature has always been giving us—that there is no single answer to any question worth asking, that truth often lies in the meeting of contraries.

Barbara Carson

He most honors my style who learns under it to destroy the teacher.

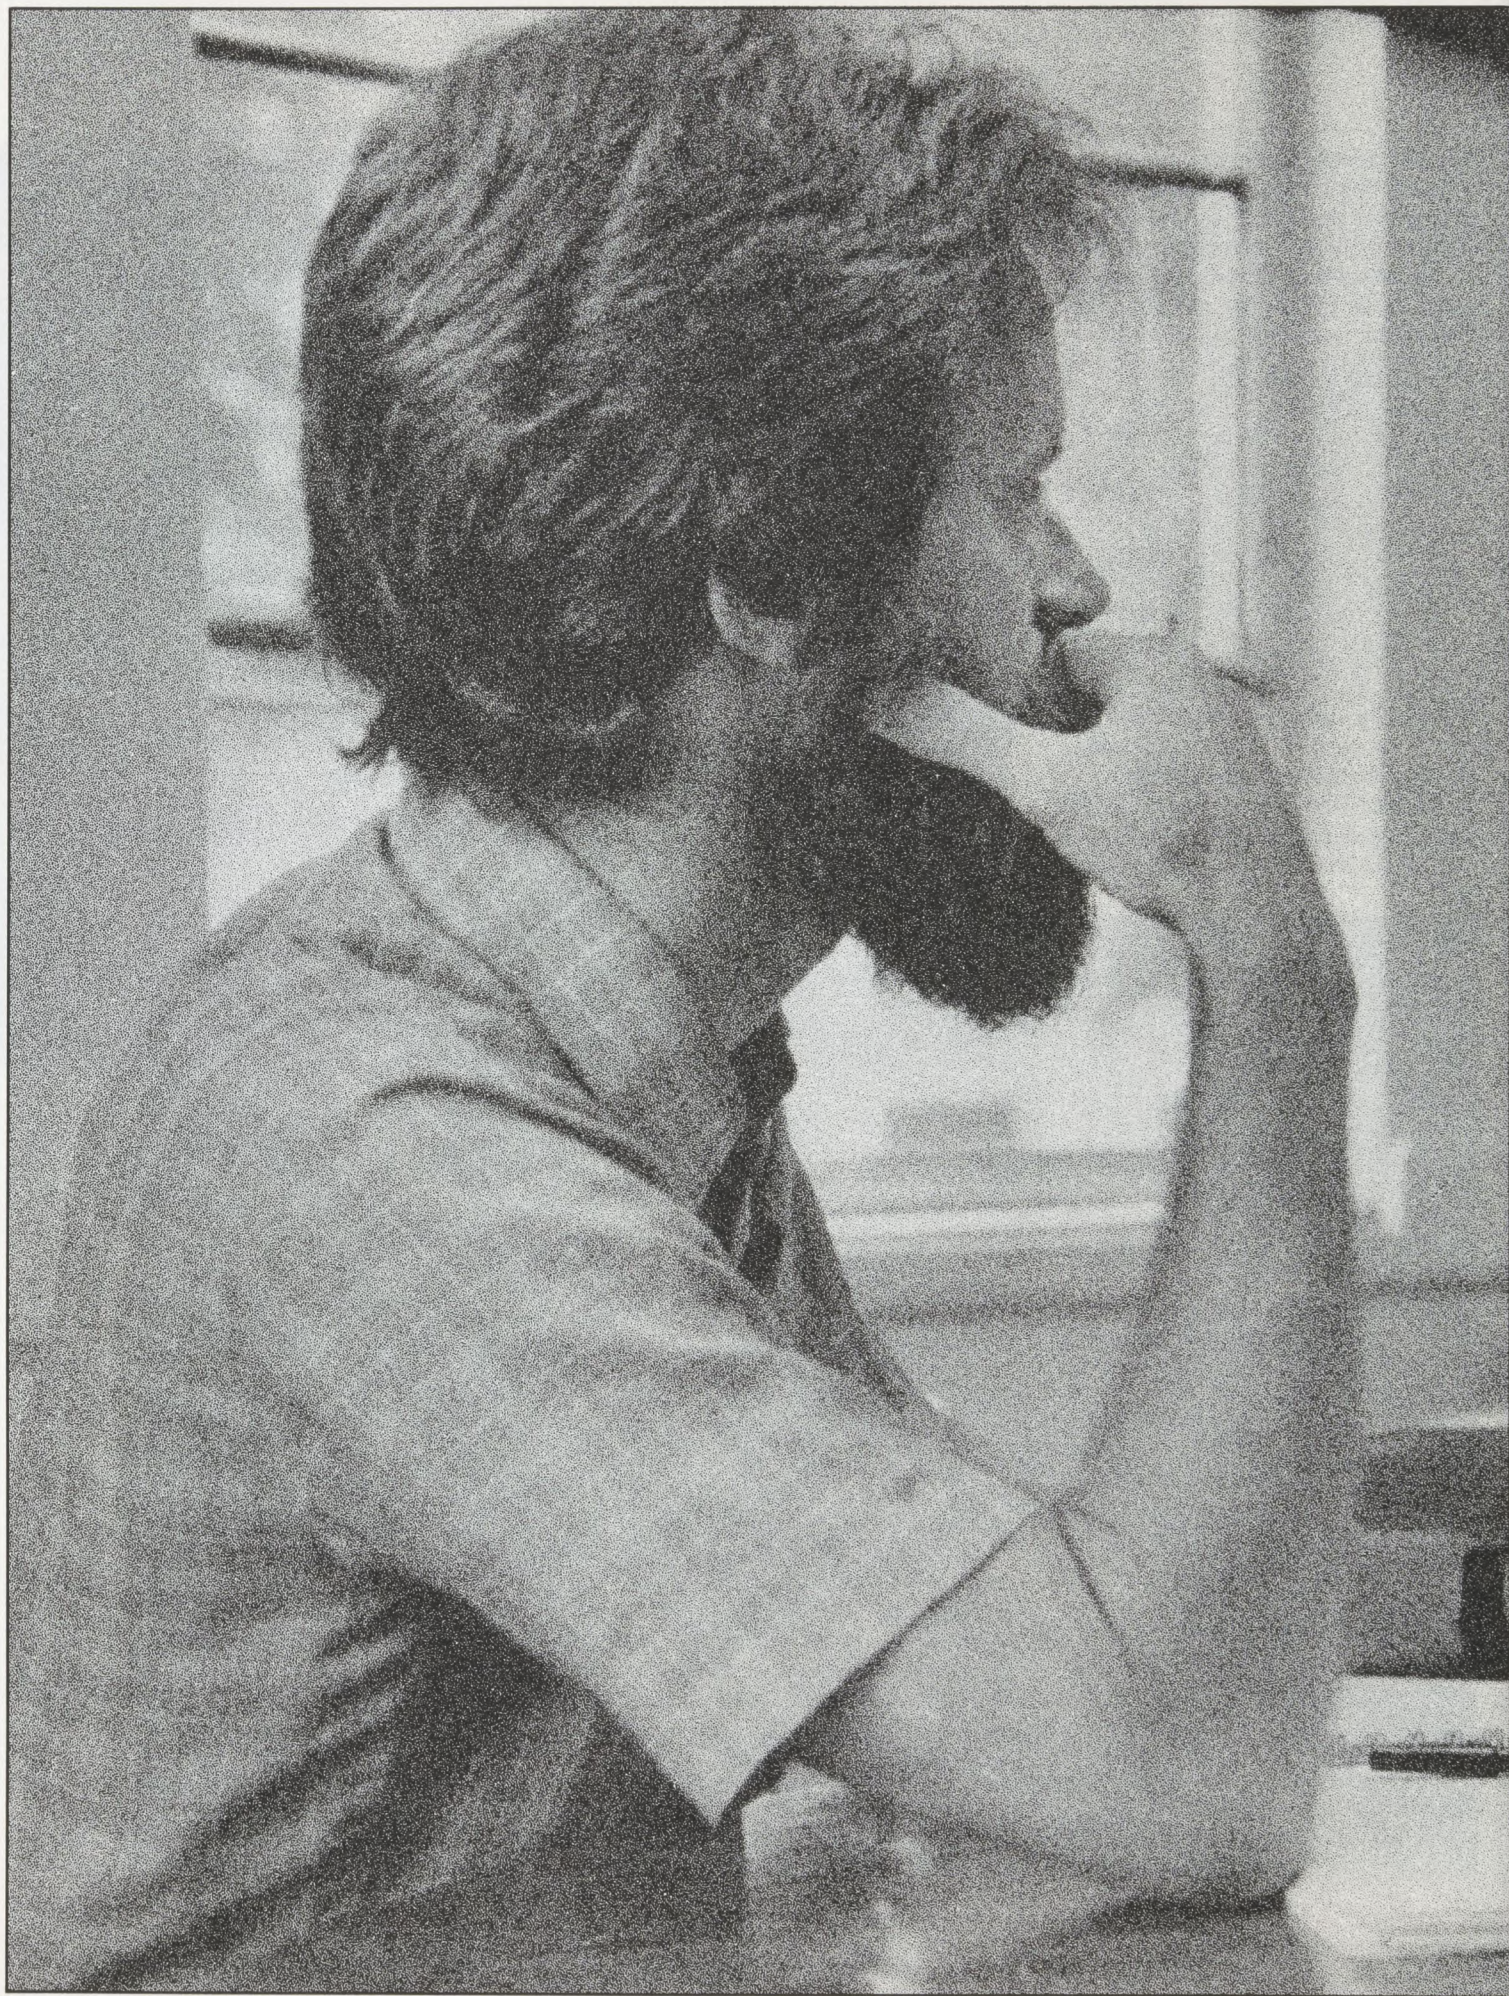

I teach straying from me, yet who can stray from me?

I follow you whoever you are from the present hour . . .

And we will follow you; and—because you have also taught us and touched us—you will follow us for the rest of our days.

So let our goodbyes be a rephrasing of the ancient double-voiced valediction: Vale atque Ave: Farewell—and hello again and again. [R]

COMMUNITY LEARNING WITH

THE NATION OF EIGHT

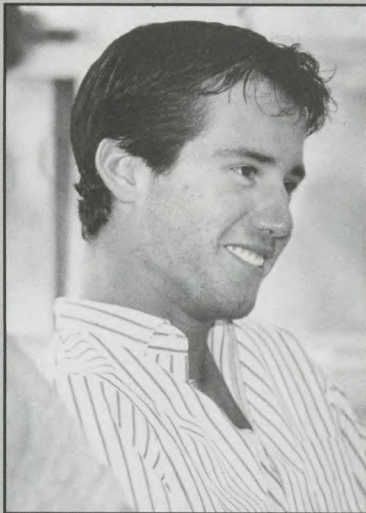

BY ROY STARLING

In the Community of Learners program (established at Rollins in the fall of 1983, largely through the efforts of Professor Jack Lane), freshmen and sophomores take three thematically related courses and help design a fourth course—the COL seminar—in which they compare and unify the material presented in the other three. They are accompanied by a Master Learner—a Rollins professor who is released from teaching duties to become a student again.

Last spring's COL focused on the theme of "Frankenstein: Creation, Machinery, and Dignity," and included courses on the history of technology (Professor Joe Siry), creation as viewed by science and religion (Professor Karl Peters), and the sociology of Kurt Vonnegut (Professor Larry Van Sickle). Roy Starling served as Master Learner.

Almost everyone who has participated in the Community of Learners (COL) program has spoken highly of it, but almost every effort to describe the experience ends with "It's really difficult to put the experience into words." I, for one, have not been too successful in sharing with others my enthusiasm for this program, but now, after serving as the Master Learner in COL, I know why it is so difficult to explain. Especially in written communication, we like to divide our subject into little segments and then discuss those

BRAHM PITERSKI:
"I wonder if our group was 'special' by chance, or if there are others just like us out there."

segments one at a time; we like to talk about "A" and then "B."

But the COL experience resists such dividing and classifying. While it is accomplishing one objective, it is also accomplishing another: faculty development, for instance, occurs at the same time students are being introduced to collaborative learning; students see significant connections between various disciplines while they are also forming a community. In short, there is much overlapping in the rich and rewarding COL experience; thus, in an effort to get it into words, I have avoided the "murder-by-dissecting" method and used in its place a series of observations and vignettes taken from the journal I kept during the term.

In just a few moments, I will walk back into the classroom as a student. What an excellent opportunity to fail! Who needs this? I have established that I can teach for a living, and it's a job I look forward to every morning. But being a student? I still have nightmares about having to take an exam in a class I'd forgotten to attend all term; on the day of the exam it comes back to me, and I am astounded by my own stupidity: "Oh, my God! How could I have forgotten this class? I knew I was forgetting something." The anxieties from my first life as a student still with me, I let go of my profession to become one again. I don't understand.

After class, my fellow community members (Tia Bethell, Greg Eckstein, Chauncey Goss, Jim Laughlin, Rick Juergens, Brahm Piterski, and Christina Russell—hereafter referred to as COLleagues) and I strolled down near Lake Virginia to get acquainted. Essentially, we all said the same thing: "I'm shy, I don't know what to expect from this program, but I expect it to be a good experience." Other than that, we had nothing in common.

In the first meeting of our Religion class, we quickly got through the business of introducing ourselves and finding out how much work we had to do (plenty), and then we did some group work on the subject matter itself. I found that working with ideas on the first day of class prevented a sense of letdown afterwards. Rather, it engaged me in the course, helped me get to know my classmates, and allowed me to see my COLleagues in action (for the first time).

Our afternoon class—Sociology—meets in the Park Avenue building across Fairbanks, so, of course, it rains on us on the way over. We go into the classroom wet, and the air-conditioner is turning the place into an igloo. We're tired, we're shivering, and we wish we were somewhere else. Poor Larry, I said to myself

TIA BETHELL:
"For the first time, I got to see my teachers as human beings. It is comforting to realize that you can talk to them, that they do have ears to listen, and hearts to feel."

early in the class. How does he hope to get the attention, much less the enthusiasm, of this weary bunch who already have enough work to keep them busy, it seems, through midterm?

This must happen all the time. What a vacuum we teach in! We look out on a classroom and we see our students whose job it is to do all our work (great and small) and do it with energy and imagination. We don't consider all the rain that falls on them outside our classroom; and we forget that, if they are ours, they are also their math teacher's and history teacher's and biology teacher's, and they are also their organization's and their roommate's.

One little walk through the rain as a student, just two days into the term, has made this an invaluable experience.

* * *

My three teachers are quite reasonable in their assignments, and the COL seminar isn't going to be too demanding;

I'm sure there are many Rollins students with much more punishing schedules than mine. But I can't help wondering. Is college a place where students are pushed through a rigorous, demanding, even punishing program of voluminous reading and writing, following, perhaps, the model of military bootcamps? Or is it a place for learning and discovery, a place where students have the time not only to be exposed to new ideas, but to integrate them as well? Can it be both? Maybe I'm just slow. The new ideas I get from one class keep getting blown away by the wind of the next before I can plant them.

All but one of our group made it to the Winter Park Diner for the inaugural meeting of our newly formed breakfast club (but since "breakfast club" now lacks originality, we've decided to call ourselves the Grits Train). We managed to crowd together into one booth, and the conversation moved smoothly and naturally from small talk (about high-school behavior and pets) and nervous humor ("If they had doughnuts, we could play ring-toss with those horns mounted up there") to COL-related material—what Thorstein Veblen would have thought of the space program, for instance. As we were putting away the ham-and-cheese omelets, Christina suggested that we go from the Diner to the library and team-tackle the project Karl had assigned us for next Tuesday; a few minutes later we were tracing down clues to the "GUTs and string" theory of the universe.

It was an enjoyable hour of detective work, an hour laced with wisecracks and bits of irreverent humor, an hour of playful competitiveness as each of us tried to be the first to find a readable article on the subject.

The "COL factor" was kicking into gear. Admittedly, our group didn't head for the library out of a thirst for new knowledge. We went because the time was right and, well, since we were all together anyway, why not? But because we made a community effort of it, we succeeded in saving valuable time, in finding more and better material and in making research a less painful endeavor. The students didn't feel like little loner nerds, library moles with a library pallor, slaving away in the stacks while their friends basked at the pool. They were with their friends.

Two questions I had coming into this program were 1) What exactly is community? and, 2) How does it happen? Now, having been through it, I can tell you the answers: 1) I don't know, but I know it exists and, 2) it just does. I am now skeptical as to how much a Master Learner can do to hasten the creation of a sense of community. The Grits Train, for instance, was designed to trick my COLleagues into feeling like a community, but instead, the Train became a valued communal event only after the community had somehow formed itself. The faculty dinners, hosted by the professors and the Master Learner, were also designed to make all of us, teachers and learners, feel more like family. But we started them too late in the term and then countless complications and unforeseen circumstances kept them from being the folksy, "glad-to-have-you-over" affairs they were designed to be.

Still, somehow, community happened, and it happened in its own good time.

Some of us did well on our first exam, others not so well, while one (who will go unnamed), who was actually well prepared for the exam, drew a complete blank. When we got our exams back, I sensed no resentment directed from the "C's" to the "A's," just a little ribbing from both directions in the COL journal. And "the kid with the 'F,'" as he dubbed himself, was not left to sulk by himself in his room. On the same day of the exam, before our next class, we made his private disaster public with sincere sympathy disguised as smart remarks: "Well, kid, how do you think you did?" This was also one of our favorite topics in the journal for the next week.

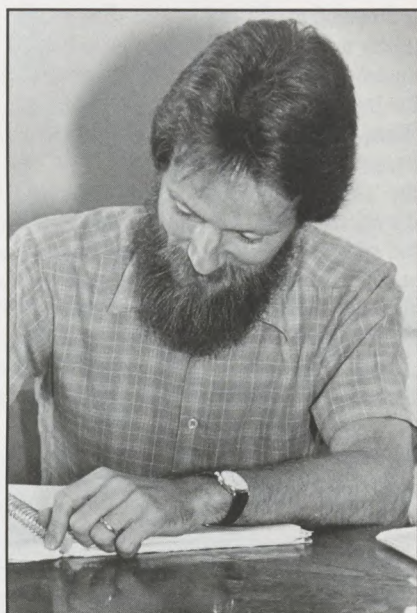

CHRISTINA RUSSELL:
"I was searching for something that would turn me back on to learning, and I found it . . . in COL."

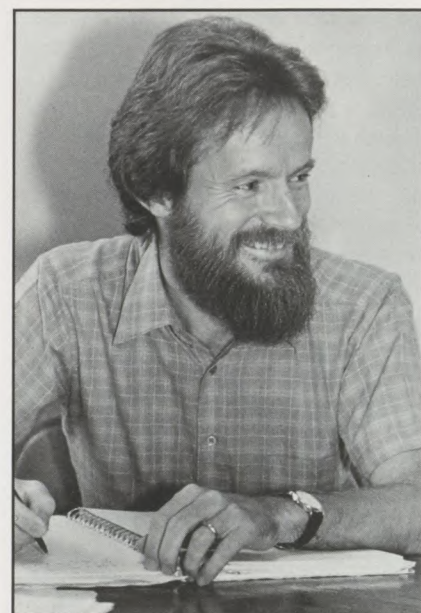

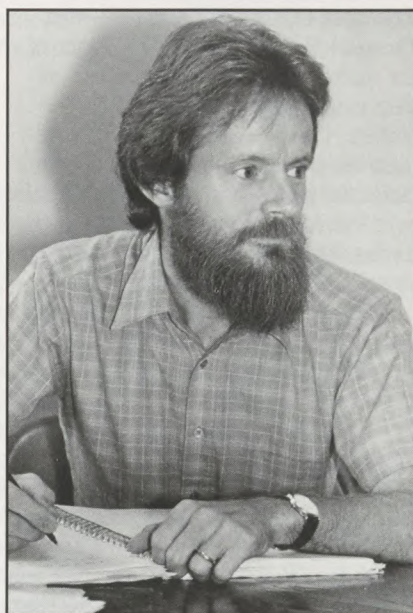

CHAUNCEY GOSS:
"I learned more this term than I ever imagined I would, but more importantly, I developed relationships not only with other people, but also with ideas."

Our community was further strengthened by our next exam (and now that I think of it, this may be the best reason to give exams). For some reason, we found it almost impossible to study for this one. Two days before the exam, we had a rather lackluster study session; the day before the exam, I sat in front of my notes and texts in a classroom in Orlando

Roy Starling

Hall and stared out the window. That night, we had our COL seminar, during which Christina was supposed to tell us exactly why our theme was called Frankenstein. She gave it a great effort, but our minds were clearly somewhere else. Consequently, the seminar deteriorated from a discussion of Frankenstein and modern technology, to another half-hearted attempt at a study session for tomorrow's exam, and finally to an outright gigglefest.

On that Wednesday night, dread and anxiety were transformed into punchiness and frivolity. We all jabbered, and everything was hilarious (the next day, I was literally sore from laughing); through the jabbering, the role of every member of the community seemed to crystallize. Our respective values were somehow shared. We openly and loudly aired our feelings and opinions concerning each of our classes.

In addition to sealing our bond of community, our concert of laughter apparently relaxed us just enough to get us successfully through the exam: we all did pretty well. However, we still faced Larry's class in the afternoon and none of us had written our daily concept cards (for each reading assignment, we were to find an important concept, and, on a 4x6 card, define it, give its significance, and explain how it fits into the author's argument). With a final surge of silliness we decided we would all do our cards on the same concept on the same page (forty-four, I believe) of Kurt Vonnegut's Mother Night. The concept concerned a character's belief, during World War II, that he and his wife formed the only important nation on earth, a "nation of two." Actually, it was quite a touching passage and it evoked a variety of responses from my COLleagues (even though we wrote on the same concept, we didn't collaborate on the writing).

We found it difficult to completely condemn the character for retreating to his "nation of two" during wartime; I think, in fact, the concept had some romantic appeal for many of our weary mariners. Consequently, when our own voyage was nearing its end, and we decided to celebrate it with T-shirts, the only slogan we could agree on was "A Nation of Eight." This was not meant to suggest a kind of nationalist pride, but rather to evoke the sentiment of Vonnegut's character: Once our community had formed, we had our own place of retreat, our own system of support, our own shelter from the storm. If you haven't been a student for a while, you may have forgotten—sometimes, it really is too much.

I came into the Community of Learners with very high expectations. I looked forward to studying outside my field for a change, I expected to improve my teaching by watching three fellow faculty members at work in the classroom, and I wanted to help a group of Rollins students share the excitement of learning I had often felt as an undergraduate. I also wanted to see, at first hand, if the program was really as good as I thought it was.

As it turns out, my knowledge of what actually goes on in a classroom was vastly expanded so that I should be a significantly better teacher this fall; the group of Rollins students I had so hoped to inspire welcomed me to their reality, helping me limp towards the finish line in the term's final weeks, reminding me that undergraduates often must worry first about survival, then excitement in their education. But most importantly, COL taught me that the formation and development of a true community is such a moving, rewarding, and life-enriching experience that it shoots past even my loftiest hopes for the program; I discovered that while community facilitates the students' job of "learning subject matter," it also models for them a good and creative way to live their lives, in college and afterwards. Learning to Love Water

How I and about 20,000 other lucky people learned to get into that wet stuff in the first place.

BY TOM PICKENS '52

When I entered college at the age of 17, there were two things I knew with absolute certainty: I was never going to pass trigonometry and I was never going to learn how to swim.

Being an English major, I could dodge the first bullet. But being a student at Rollins College in Winter Park, Florida meant that swimming was another matter altogether.

The Rollins campus is on a lake. It has a long curving waterfront with picturesque live oak trees trailing Spanish moss, and blue-green water sings its siren song of beckoning all year round.

With a great deal of foreboding, I selected swimming as my athletic elective, knowing full well I was destined to fail. I had tried to learn to swim at countless seminars, summer camps, and scout rallies. I had spent hours draped over a lifeline trying to inject a spark of life into my squalid imitation of an Australian crawl, all the same result: I sank like a rock in a brilliant plume of bubbles.

I noted on my schedule that the class was conducted by a "Prof. Peeples." When I reported to class the first day, the Prof. was in a canoe by the swimming dock. My first impression was one of deep tan: Peeples looked like somebody who spent long hours in the sun or in water colored by cypress roots (both proved eminently correct).

"I can't swim," I said flatly, perhaps even mournfully. Peeples looked up with a sort of twinkle in his eye and said, "See the other side of the lake? A month from now you'll swim across to it."

A month later I swam across to the other side of the lake. The second month I was making like Buster Crabbe along the racing lanes between the swimming docks, surface diving, gliding underwater wearing a mask to watch the bass nests, and coming up from under to catch the baby snapping turtles that snorkled their snouts out of the water along-side the pilings of the swimming dock, an activity that led to a certain sense of accomplishment and a pair of scrunched-in thumbs. A whole new world had opened up for me: I was a swimmer.

Luckily, I had encountered one of the all-time great teachers: Fleet Peeples, or more properly Fleetwood Delgado Peeples, swimming coach at Rollins College and (perhaps even more importantly) swimming instructor for the Winter Park community at large.

In a career spanning some 60 years, Fleet has taught more than 20,000 people how to swim. Now in his nineties, Fleet is something of a living legend in Central Florida.

I—the original sinking rock—learned

We learned the therapeutic value of water: An hour's swim could wash away a lot of tension and anxiety.

how to swim relatively late in life. But Fleet has taught hundreds of people to swim almost as soon as they could walk, and in some cases before they could talk. Out on the Rollins swimming dock you were likely to be knee-deep in kids. I often watched with something approaching awe as one of Fleet's two-year-old pupils pollywogged past me in 10 feet of water down the length of the dock to climb out at the far end with perfect aplomb and assurance. This is more than mere skill development. It is a basic necessity of life in a warm-weather state like Florida with swimming pools in every backyard and hundreds of freshwater lakes dappling everywhere, a means of assuring that smallish human beings will survive around water long enough to reach the age of discretion.

Fleet has taught as many as four generations of a single family to swim: parents, children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. Generation by generation, each succeeding set of parents bring their children to Fleet to develop the same sense of confidence and accomplishment.

Fleet has taught blue babies, blind children, children with missing limbs, and children with other handicaps. They all learn they can survive in water under any set of circumstances. They learn to swim to shore after they've been dumped in the middle of a lake, they learn to swim in both bathing suits and fully clothed, they learn to escape from water packed with lily pads. And they get a real sense of achievement doing it.

With Fleet you never got the idea that swimming was a discipline or a chore. It was fun. Water was something to be enjoyed. Looking back at some of the swimming teams he coached, Fleet noted, "We never won a championship, but we sure had a lot of fun." That statement would probably bring screams of outrage from "win-or-else" coaches, but I've met plenty of adults who were members of their collegiate swimming teams who have not been in water since graduation because they hate water and learned to do so in college. Fleet's former pupils spend their lives getting back into water every chance they get, for fun, for relaxation, for health.

Thanks to Fleet, we learned the therapeutic value of water. It was refreshing and relaxing. An hour's swim could wash away a lot of tension and anxiety. People who do a lot of hiking and bicycling get the same feeling of physical well-being: It is your body's way of saying that everything is O.K., and that there can't be too much wrong with the world immediately around you that can't be fixed.

You don't have to swim fast either. The natural resistance of water is a tonic at virtually any speed. You can be drifting along on your back watching the clouds roll by and still reap a bumper crop of physical benefits: Your muscles tone up without your even being aware of it. For example, until I learned to swim I had always been a slow runner. Slow? I couldn't outrun anybody. But swimming helped me build up my leg muscles so that I discovered to my surprise (and delight) I had acquired a whippet-like sprinting speed that left everybody trailing my dust. I know of people who have rebuilt muscles in physically damaged limbs by swimming. At first, the damaged limb lies in the water like a log while the other limbs do all the work, or so it seems. In actuality, the natural resistance of the water works on the limb to restore it while the limb is apparently doing nothing.

There was one thing I noticed about Fleet's teaching technique that was different. Unlike any other swimming instructor I had ever seen, Fleet started out by teaching his pupils to swim on their backs first. "Swimming on your back is a lot less tiring than swimming on your stomach," he explained. "You can go a lot further and you don't have to expend a lot of energy."

So, the first thing we learned to do was float on our backs. To do this, we had to conquer that icy little moment of panic when you realize that, for the very first time, water is climbing up over your ears from behind. You tend to rear up and try to climb an invisible ladder to land. It is almost a reflex and unfortunately, "climbing a ladder" is about the only movement you can make in water that won't keep you afloat: It sinks you.

Somehow, Fleet managed to show us how to put our heads far enough back into the water so that only our faces showed. Death, destruction and the retribution of God did not follow instantaneously, contrary to the messages our throat and our oxygen-oriented brain were trying to send us. As a matter of fact, once we got used to the position we found it rather restful and consoling: In defiance of gravity, we were suspended peacefully on the world's original water mattress.

Once we learned how to swim on our backs, we learned to roll over and swim on our stomachs. From there on everything was easy. We soon learned that practically any movement you can make in water (with the exception of climbing the ladder) would keep us afloat, that the more we kept our heads down the faster we went, and that we could handle long distances without tiring. We learned to dive from the dock and go deep. Most of all we learned that once we were in the water, we were in our own element. Something in our essential nature responded to it—a reconfirmation of something we perhaps already knew subconsciously—that there is a oneness between the individual and the clouds and the water.

Everything was taken step-by-step. We didn't move from one stage to the next until we were good and ready. Once when he was discussing the confidence he built in his young pupils, Fleet said, "I tell them to try and to fail, that's O.K. That's good. But to never try, that's horrible. But we don't fail because we don't try something until I know they're able to do it."

In Fleet's mind there was certainly no point in making you dislike water by rushing things. Water was part of nature and so were you—the two of you were going to get along just fine.

Fleet took students on weekend canoeing trips up the St. John's River, carefully pointing out all the different forms of animal and plant life that flourished along the banks and explaining the uses of each. Somehow, you got the idea that you were part of all this. In Central Florida, dimestore turtles grow to hubcap size (or larger) and sun themselves in pancake stacks along the shore, black water snakes are coiled in bunches on every sagging branch, and those two bumps you're looking at in the water in front of your canoe are the eyes of an alligator looking back at you. We learned this was all perfectly normal and there wasn't anything out there we couldn't handle. It was a very rewarding sensation.

"We spend too little time teaching people how to have fun, how to appreciate life," Fleet says. "And we're too busy running and learning how to make a living to stop and breathe and look around. If I can teach these children to stop and enjoy the water, and to love the outdoors the way I have, I'll consider myself a success."

A success? Each year, the people at Rollins stage a surprise party for Fleet. It must be one of the least secret surprises of all time. Hundreds of friends and former pupils show up. "I'm not rich, not in money," Fleet says. "But I've gotten so much love. The children and their families are such wonderful people. When I judge my life by that, I have to feel I've been wonderfully successful."

A long and happy life? Well past his 90th birthday, Fleet is still out there in the water teaching kids to swim, tossing two- and three-year-olds out of his canoe and having them follow him across the lake like a line of ducklings. There seems to be some synergizing therapy at work among all of them.

Years after I graduated, served time in the army, and duffed around at this and that, I made a brief visit to my old campus. Fleet was at his accustomed place on the swimming dock, working with a group of tadpole-sized kids. I went down to watch. I didn't even know if he'd remember me, just one person out of so many hundred. I needn't have worried. He looked up, saw me, and called out, "What are you doing up there on dry land? Get out here in the water where you belong." ☐

'85-'86

REPORT

Year in Review

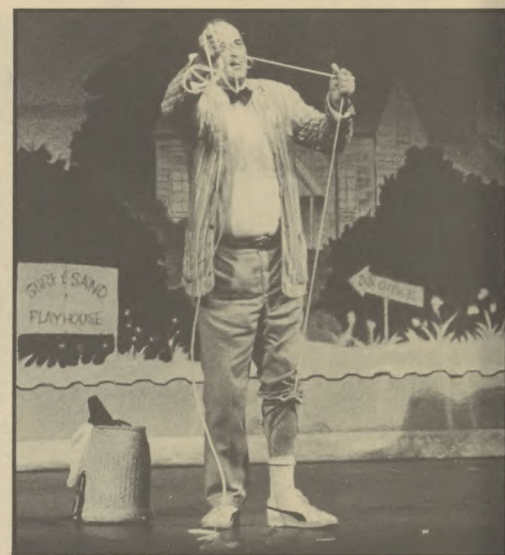

Sept.

Rollins College opens Centennial year classes on September 9... 1,370 students are enrolled for '85-'86 academic term at Florida's oldest college... Largest class of new students arrives for Orientation—513 Freshmen and Transfers!... National Chair of the Rollins Fund

An Alumna Trustee, this dynamo set the pace for her eleven-member committee with her contagious enthusiasm and dedication to Rollins. Her leadership brought the 1985-86 Rollins Fund to a successful close by raising $1,100, 247 for current operating expenses.

Alumni Fund General Chairman

Jim Robinson's efforts resulted in raising an all-time record of $486,954, well above the $440,000 goal, from 3,214 alumni. To accomplish this, his responsibilities included overseeing the fundraising from all alumni constituencies: 4-year undergraduates, alumni who attended Rollins for at least a semester, continuing education graduates, Patrick Air Force Base graduates and master's degree graduates.

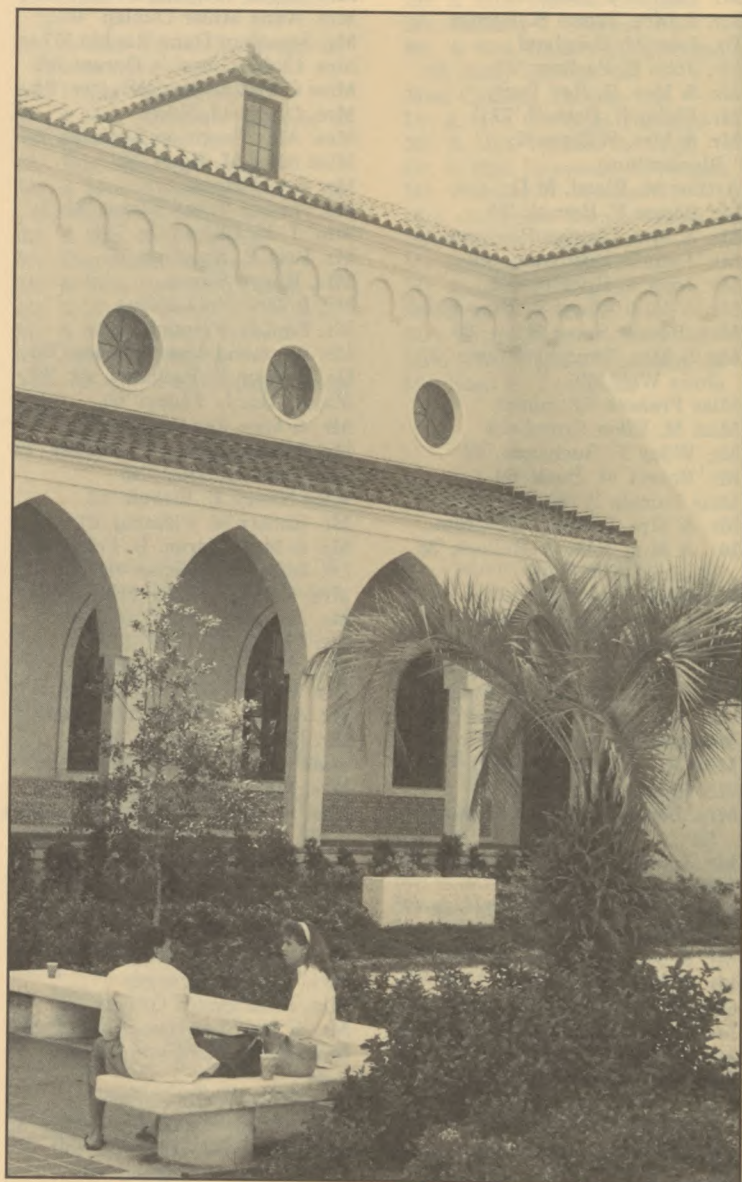

As President of Sun Bank/South Florida in Ft. Lauderdale, Jim's busy schedule did not prevent him from finding time to write hundreds of letters, follow up with phone calls and attend meetings for his alma mater.

Paul F. Vonder Heide '83
Young Alumni Representative

A fast-rising star in banking, Paul is already Vice President for Lending at the new National Bank of Commerce in Orlando. His understanding of the importance of encouraging young alumni to form the habit of annual giving to Rollins has been key to his success with bringing greater numbers of young alumni donors on board. Paul will organize a committee of young alumni to assist in soliciting recent graduates and promoting the newly established Fox Club.

Bert E. Roper, '48
Other Alumni Representative

Hundreds of students who attended Rollins for at least one semester and feel the College influenced their lives in a positive way strongly support the Rollins Fund. One such individual, Bert E. Roper, a prominent citrus industry businessman from Winter Garden, FL, has served two years representing this group. Protesting the misnomer "non-graduate" which had been used to classify this constituency, Bert stated, "I did graduate from college . . . just not from Rollins." He is responsible for the change to "Other Alumni." This past year 446 Other Alumni donated $40,205 to the Rollins Fund, surpassing their $32,500 goal!

E. Peter Krulewitch

Parents Representative

President of Kingston Investors Corp. in New York City, Peter serves both as a Trustee and Chairman of the Parents Committee. As a substantial contributor over and above tuition fees paid for his son Dan '88, Peter has taken a leadership role in encouraging other parents to contribute to the Parents Fund which totalled $109,812 for 1985-86. His philosophy regarding parent giving is: "The exciting progress of Rollins allows us all the rare opportunity of taking part in a truly meaningful and worthwhile cause."

Kyle and Sarah Mitchell
Friends Representatives

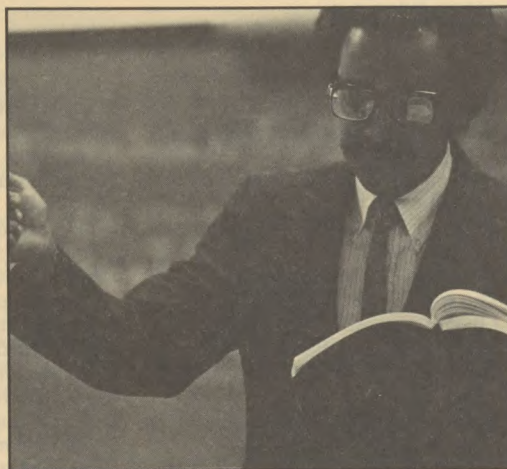

This delightful couple, retired and living in Winter Park, are seen on campus as often as the students. Actively involved with the Cornell Fine Arts Center, Annie Russell Theatre, Friends of Music and the Rollins Fund, to say nothing of non-Rollins organizations. You have to plan well in advance to get meeting dates on their calendar. The Mitchell's tireless endeavors added forty new donors and brought in $188,580 for the Rollins Fund last year.

Richard A. Lima
Faculty/Staff Representative
Richard is an Associate Professor of Foreign Languages and also served as Coordinator of Freshman Advisers, an arduous and time-consuming assignment. With his usual grin and enthusiasm, he agreed to help with solicitations to the faculty and staff netting gifts from close to a quarter of all College employees. Next year Richard will represent just the faculty and a staff person will be added to the committee which should promote a greater percentage of campus-wide giving.

Ray Mayhall Corporate Representative

Corporate gifts to the Rollins Fund took a giant leap forward under Ray's leadership. The challenging goal was set at $200,000, a substantial increase from the previous year. The final 1985-86 tally was $228,547 from corporations in Central Florida. Ray is General Manager of the Orlando Coca-Cola Bottling Company which supplied student phanathon workers with complimentary soft drinks.

WILLING DONORS

Bequests Received in 1985-86

During the last year Rollins has been the grateful recipient of legacies totaling $371,655 from alumni and other friends of the College. These bequests, large and small, help to assure the future strength of the College, while perpetuating the donors' interest in excellence in education. Some of these thoughtful provisions are mentioned here.

Helen Brown Andrews '38 $1,000

Helen Andrews retained close ties with Rollins throughout her lifetime, being married in Knowles Memorial Chapel, serving as reunion chairman for her class and devoted Alumni Association volunteer. She perpetuated her interest in the College through her unrestricted legacy for the Rollins Fund.

Louise Ingham Ashforth '30 $100,188

Louise Ashforth lived abroad during much of her life, spending World War II in Burma and India and her last years in Sussex, England. She left her beloved house, "Graystones," to Rollins and her legacy will assist members of the faculty desiring to study and travel in the British Isles. Her art collection, which included a fine portrait of Pavlova by Sir John Lavery, was also left to the College for the Cornell Fine Arts Center.

Claire L. MacDowell $25,740

This final distribution from Mrs. MacDowell's estate is divided as follows: $22,500 to be added to an earlier amount which established the MacDowell Scholarship Fund and $3,240 to the Book-A-Year program. These legacies will increase the College's endowment for financial aid to students and the purchase of books for the library.

Flora Lindsay Magoun $250

A graduate of Wellesley, Associate Professor Emeritus of Business Administration Flora Magoun served Rollins from 1935 until her retirement in 1968. When he distributed Mrs. Magoun's many legacies her son wrote to each beneficiary: "Whether you are an individual or an institution you meant something special to Flora L. Magoun as her bequest to you attests. Her axiom was never to spend capital, only the income from it. Now she has entrusted a portion of that capital to you with her love and affection." Her family made a gift to endowment in her memory and other friends have established three complete Book-A-Year memorials.

Carolyn Heine Planck '32 $1,000

While still a student at Rollins, Carolyn Planck began to write poetry with encouragement from Edwin Grover and Jessie Rittenhouse. She and her husband travelled extensively and chronicled their experiences in several lively books on low budget trips. Her novel, "To Live and Die in Dixie," was reviewed in the Alumni Record and contained references to Rollins. Mrs. Planck's unrestricted legacy will assist other aspiring writers.

Virginia Quantrell '39 $22,500

Virginia Quantrell transferred to Rollins from Mount Vernon College and majored in music. She possessed a beautiful soprano voice and alumni files record her service as a soloist at All Saints Church in Winter Park and contain complimentary newspaper reviews of various recitals. Miss Quantrell left one-tenth of her residual estate to the College for its endowment with the request that the income be used for scholarships in music, preferably for the benefit of students with talent in singing.

Jeannett Reuter $189,778

Mrs. Reuter became interested in Rollins through her friendship with President Emeritus Hugh McKean '30. She made a number of gifts during McKean's presidency, including real estate, a yacht and a Steinway grand piano. Her will directed her executor to sell jewelry, art, household furnishings, and other personal effects not specifically bequeathed to others and to divide the proceeds equally between Rollins and the Salvation Army, another charity dear to her heart. Her unrestricted bequest to the College totals $326,647.

Barbara Sheffield '28 $3,000

Since she had spent her career as an educator, Miss Sheffield was well aware of how important financial support of her college was. She made her first gift to the Alumni Fund in 1928 and was a faithful donor for the rest of her life. Her unrestricted bequest perpetuates that commitment.

The Taxwise Giving Committee of Rollins College welcomes inquiries from alumni and other friends who would like to include the College in their estate plans. Please write to the Taxwise Giving Committee, Campus Box 2724, Rollins College, Winter Park, Florida 32789 or telephone 305-646-2606.

Members of the Taxwise Giving Committee are: Marion Haddad Brown '73, C.P.A.; Christopher Clanton '68, trust officer; Sara Harbottle Howden '35, civic worker; Warren C. Hume '39, Trustee and business executive; Allan E. Keen '70, real estate developer; Michael L. Marlowe '65, attorney; Robert F. Stonerock '41, C.P.A.; Harold A. Ward, III, Trustee and attorney; M. Elizabeth Brothers, associate vice president.

Generous Giving

GIFTS-IN-KIND

In addition to the gifts of cash and securities recognized in this report, Rollins was the grateful recipient of many tangible contributions in support of its educational program. These were valued by the donors in excess of $150,000. They included scientific equipment, office and dormitory furnishings, silver utensils and sewing materials for the costume department of the Annie Russell Theatre.

Among the works of art received by the Cornell Fine Arts Center were paintings from the collection of Professor Emeritus of History Rhea M. Smith and the estates of Louise Ingham Ashforth '30 and Tibor Pataky. Robert Grabowski '63 donated a collection of hand-signed Salvador Dali lithographs and the Friends of Cornell Acquisition Fund enabled the College to acquire two works by William Glackens. The gift of 20 photographs by Barry Thompson from Lou Grubb further enhances the collection.

Robert Haserot contributed the academic library assembled by his father, the late Francis Haserot. Robert Buck '54, '66 contributed the time line display located in the Olin Library during the College's Centennial celebration and donated many of the materials for it. Marcia Ramsdell '55 contributed a Spectrum I computer color analysis center for the psychology department and the music department received gifts of records and sheet music.

Local businesses donated services and refreshments for various Rollins events. Several alumni, parents and other friends graciously opened their homes or provided hospitality at their clubs to Rollins groups throughout the country.

Edward D. Wirth, III Senior Class Representative

Graduating seniors from the Class of 1986 helped "Chart the Course" for the second century of Rollins by undertaking the most ambitious campaign in the three-year history of the "Beginnings" program. Under the direction of chairman Ed Wirth, thirty seniors served as class agents and met individually with each member of the senior class to explain the importance of annual, unrestricted Rollins Fund gifts.

"Beginnings '86" significantly surpassed its $1,250 goal, generating a class gift of $2,056, with 55 percent of the class participating. This outstanding display of class unity serves as an example to alumni of all classes and programs. Though the Class of '86 total dollar gift represents only a small portion of the Rollins Fund total, the participation rate is very impressive!

Q. Doyle Oldham '68
School of Continuing Education Representative

Having completed both his undergraduate work and more recently his MBA from the Crummer Graduate School of Business, Doyle has spent many years on the Rollins campus. A real asset to the Rollins Fund Committee, Doyle represents 25 years of graduates from the continuing education program which he says "has come a long way over the years." Currently employed by Financial Savings Bank in Lakeland, which is a long commute from his Longwood home, Doyle manages to find time to work for Rollins writing letters and making phone calls to raise funds from fellow alumni who completed their education "the hard way."

William C. Cogswell '74
Patrick Air Force Base Representative

Retired from the Army, this gentleman donates his time as an instructor at PAFB and was pleased to join the Rollins Fund volunteer group. Addressing the need to create closer ties between Patrick alumni and current students at the base, the Colonel was instrumental in creating a newsletter, The Patrick Propeller, and a questionnaire on social activities and areas of student involvement. Further good news ... the Colonel has re-enlisted for another year!

ZELO:

(Italian) Fervor for a person, object or cause.

(English) The zealous undertaking of a group of young Rollins alumni.

In creating any type of art, there is as much danger involved as there is excitement. Zelo is a dangerous, but very exciting project produced by predominantly young, talented Floridians.

The excitement comes from the public—all of those people who, before the magazine was even published, immediately responded positively when the concept of Zelo was explained. The danger lies in anticipating the larger public response from both our audience and our advertisers as our first issues hit the stands.

We have taken risks with our editorial material. In large metropolitan areas, the topics we have covered seem mild; in Florida, which has a more conservative consensus, our writings may appear controversial.

We are not afraid of controversy. Instead, we welcome it because controversy stimulates the mind, and if Zelo can make a reader contemplate a specific subject, then it has accomplished a major coup.

Success? Yes, I want Zelo to be successful . . . and I am willing to accept the risks along the way.

Phil Pyster, Editor
ZELO Magazine

WINTER PARK—May 1, 1986

Zelo, Central Florida's new cultural magazine, debuts at a premiere party at the Enzian Theater with over 300 Rollins friends, subscribers, interview subjects, advertisers and media representatives on hand . . . all waiting with great anticipation for the unmasking of the first issue. Excitement is in the air as Editor Phil Pyster '82 takes the stage following opening remarks by publishers Mike and Pat Segal (parents of Michael Segal '81) and proudly introduces the other founding members of Zelo: Al Landsberger '82, Justine Deming '85, Jay Werba '86, David LeTourneau and me (Diana Chrissis '83). A magazine is born!

BY DIANA CHRISSIS '83

This is the Zelo story:

PARK PLAZA GARDENS—

January 1985

Jay Werba, editor of the Sandspur, meets with Phil to discuss the Winter Term issue of the paper. As a former editor of the Sandspur, Phil can understand Jay's enthusiasm to create an issue very different from any other one. They decide to produce an issue emulating the style of Andy Warhol's Interview magazine, including the photographs, editorial content and design.

SEVERAL DAYS LATER—

January 1985

Jay and Phil meet with photographer David LeTourneau, who is immediately enthused about the new creative endeavor. They set up a marathon series of photo shoots to go along with the articles planned for the issue, and the Interview/Sandspur project is underway!

WINTER TERM—1985

Jay and Phil work on the magazine at the office of Pat Crow-Segal's management company, where Phil works as vice president of publications. The new Sandspur is circulated at the end of Winter Term and becomes an immediate hit. It is then that Jay and Phil realize that its greatest appeal is the way it makes celebrities out of the "ordinary" people interviewed. This is the spark that becomes the origin of Zelo.

HARPER'S TAVERN—Spring 1985

Once again at a Winter Park drinking establishment, thoughts turn to the future. Basking in the success of "their" Sandspur, Jay and Phil joke about how exciting it would be if someone asked them to create a real magazine. Al, Phil and I have all stayed in the Central Florida area after graduating and frequently have gripe sessions about how we miss the cultural stimulation that is so prevalent in large metropolitan areas and the lack of many kinds of cultural influences in Central Florida. We feel powerless to change the situation. The Sandspur project, with which we were all involved to some extent, had awakened the "group's" creativity, and now we miss it. We gain vicarious pleasure offering Jay advice and moral support in his efforts to edit the remaining issues of the Sandspur and wonder if and when we will ever face printer's deadlines again.

ORLANDO INTERNATIONAL

AIRPORT—Late Spring 1985

Phil picks up Mike and Pat Segal at the airport. The Segals are very familiar with the Winter Term Sandspur, having seen its various stages of production unfold in Pat's office. They ask Phil if he might be interested in starting a magazine in Florida. (Would he!) The Segals, who are ardent supporters of the arts, see a magazine as an opportunity to contribute to the area's culture through an avenue that meshes perfectly with their extensive business experience and the talents of the people around them. Phil takes their offer seriously, confident he can make the project work with the help of creative friends and associates who have experience in many different aspects of media.

THE WEEK FOLLOWING "THE"

AIRPORT MEETING—Late Spring 1985

Phil begins recruiting a staff in earnest and establishes the "core" group—Jay

Werba, Al Landsberger, Justine Deming, David LeTourneau and me. Initially, we have a naive plan for organization. In a style quite typical of many creative groups, we rebel against the idea of setting up a structural hierarchy. Our initial plan is to create a working climate of collective opinion, much like the classroom discussions at Rollins. But reality sets in and we realize that some structure is needed for us to get the job done. Structuring ourselves will be a difficult task, since all of us are used to being "in charge."

Each member of the core staff has editorial and creative experience in publications. Phil was a Sandspur editor during his senior year at Rollins. After graduation he became a technical writer and moved on to his position with Crow-Segal. Jay also edited the Sandspur, in his junior year, and is now concentrating on finishing his last year of college so he can pursue the magazine full-time. I edited the Sandspur for two years as an undergraduate and have continued following my interest by writing occasional articles for the Alumni Record. Al was an associate editor of the Sandspur and continued as the publication's layout artist after graduation while working for a local television and radio station. He is now art director for Crow-Segal.

The division of responsibilities that finally results proves to be a winning combination that enhances the creativity and potential of the group members, forming an artistic union that is stronger than any one individual could be. To keep the artistic juices flowing and the process on target, Pat, Phil and Al hold daily meetings at Crow-Segal, and the entire core group meets faithfully each Thursday for troubleshooting and updates.

SEGALS' LIVING ROOM—

Summer 1985

So, what's the magazine going to be about? "Florida! We need to show there's more to this state than Mickey Mouse and flamingos. There is more intelligent life here than what is shown on Miami Vice . . ." Thoughts like these fill the room as we share our ideas on what we

"What a magazine! Culture has come alive in Florida!"

"It is refreshing to read about interesting people who are not the usual local society clique."

"Hello, Zelo! It's so nice to have you here. Hope you'll stay."

"Not only do we love the magazine—we love the idea that fellow Rollins alums have put together such a tasty piece."

Pat and Emily Dalsemer '65

feel the magazine should be. "Interviews, we've got to have interviews" . . . "I want to make some unknown people famous" . . . "We also must focus on the arts, creative endeavors in our area" . . . "We need to showcase Florida artists and writers."

And so we debate editorial philosophy and ideas for articles for the first issue. We decide to focus on people—whom they are and what they do. We want to emphasize freedom—an article on interracial marriage, an interview with Soviet dissident Sasha Sokolov, and "Rage in Eden," an essay on hardcore punk and the end of the American Dream. We want to give our audience material that is different from the usual fare in other Central Florida publications. It is apparent from the wide range of topics planned that we are liberal in orientation and are open to different opinions. Even if we don't feel comfortable endorsing a topic, we'll cover it if it is unusual or interesting. While the editorial material will focus on Florida, we will also seek to introduce to our audience subjects of general interest originating outside of Florida.

Deciding on the magazine's content is the easy part. The hard part is creating a name that will go along with our concept. We toss around "Tribe" and "Native" because they represent our ideas of regionalism and group effort. But it is our publisher, Mike Segal, who suggests the name we are looking for. One of his favorite words is "zeal," a word which Webster's defines as "fervor for a person, cause or object." We decide that it fits us perfectly, and after trying different variations, eventually end up with the Italian derivation "Zelo." Not only does "Zelo" sound terrific, but we feel an Italian word is most appropriate as the Italians are current leaders in every aspect of design, and we intend for our design to be outstanding.

CROW-SEGAL CONFERENCE ROOM—Fall 1985

The deadline for the first issue has been postponed, and we continue to brainstorm for articles. Under the direction of Pat

Garner '81, we launch an ambitious ad sales campaign. Our first task is to introduce the concept of image advertising to Central Florida merchants. We want ad copy and graphics that create a unique image in the audience's mind—something that is done effectively in only a few Florida publications. Mike Segal gives the directive that the advertising "look" must be as innovative and creative as the magazine's editorial content and photography. We quickly realize that it is impossible to introduce this new concept by showing a client the Winter Term Sandspur and past issues of Interview and New York Talk magazines. Our need for a sample product and a means of testing our printer leads us to develop a prototype issue, complete with full-color cover, dummy copy and image advertising.

Now, with a tangible Zelo for potential advertisers to see, people start taking us seriously. Our credibility is boosted tremendously. Our image is no longer of a "bunch of kids from Rollins putting out a funky tabloid like Interview," but of a professional, experienced organization. After seeing the prototype issue, Orange News, the local periodical distributor, immediately makes a commitment to distribute Zelo. Originally, our plan was to mass-distribute the initial issues of Zelo

"If you'd like to send me the first issue, do so. I won't subscribe until I've seen it. I'm mistrustful of people who apparently don't trust anyone over 30 (judging by the graduating dates of your people.) I was Editor-in-Chief of the Sandspur in 1945-46!" Betty Kenagy Voegtlen '47

"Dear Editor: All I can say is WOW!"

"You've come up with an excellent magazine and should be very proud. The breadth and depth of subject matter is exhilarating." Evan Griffith '81 for free and display them in restaurants, bookstores, record stores, hair salons, and anywhere else someone might pick up a copy. We would build a subscription base from the free copies as well as purchased mailing lists. Instead, our agreement with Orange News puts the magazine in 300 outlets all over Central Florida, with plans to approach other distributors in Tampa, Miami and North Florida.

EDITORIAL MEETING/SEGALS' HOUSE—Winter 1985

The deadline for Volume I, Issue I has been pushed back to early Spring 1986. We are not discouraged; we have enough copy and ads to fill 96 pages—Phil's goal for the first magazine. We are actually selling ad space. Most maiden publications are forced to give away the ad space for one or two issues. Zelo has succeeded in securing paid advertising for the first issue, a rare accomplishment. This is encouraging and indicates to us that there are others who feel there is a demand for a magazine like ours in Central Florida.

The main topic of this meeting is budget. We have spent nearly four times what we originally planned, not having anticipated the need for advertising brochures and the prototype issue. At this time we decide to go with a glossy paper stock rather than newsprint, which will more than triple our production costs. Phil's original plan was to make the magazine stand out from all the rest by producing an oversize tabloid on uncoated paper. After running the prototype on newsprint, it is apparent that glossy paper is necessary to bring out vibrant color in photos and achieve sharp contrast in our black and white photographs.

Looking back, this decision is a turning point. We drop our original vision of an offbeat, quarterly tabloid and aim for a dream we never thought possible . . . that of a slick, expensive, serious magazine.

CROW-SEGAL PRODUCTION OFFICE—Spring 1986

The first issue is finally in production! Like expectant parents, we are all in a frenzy of last minute activity—making arrangements for the premiere party, proofing ads, and finalizing the PR campaign and distribution plans.

Each of us finds time to visit the printer and watch wide-eyed as the magazine ("OUR" magazine) rolls off the press. Al and Phil approve each page, and as the magazine is put together, we touch it, smell it and read it . . . again and again . . . over and over.

Each of us, in our own way, feels that same unforgettable satisfaction we felt a few years ago when our first Sandspur rolled off the press. The energy and excitement of seeing the final outcome of our months of work is incredible.

The excitement doesn't fade. Even as we spend time on the less glamorous and tedious task of bundling and labeling issues for mass mailing, we are quickly wrapped up in planning the second issue scheduled to hit the stands in August.

WEEKS FOLLOWING THE RELEASE OF THE DEBUT ISSUE—Spring 1986

Letters and subscriptions arrive daily. We get glowing reviews and constructive criticism. We receive congratulations from Jan Wenner, publisher of Rolling Stone and Us magazines; Bob Guccione, Jr., editor and publisher of Spin magazine; and the art director of Time magazine. They have all read Zelo and are happy that this exciting and creative project has been developed in the state of Florida.

A time of reflection follows any major endeavor like this. Phil, in looking back on the creation of Zelo, is quick to point out that the end product is not solely his own vision but the combined input of many creative forces and a conglomeration of special talents . . . Al, who is influenced by dynamic publications like the British magazine The Face, brings his unique design expertise to the magazine. Jay's specialty is uncovering unusual stories and landing interviews with reclusive personalities like Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. Justine is a great "detail" person . . . she assists with the production process, coordinates photo sessions and troubleshoots in a number of different areas. David determines what "look" each photograph will portray. And I have introduced the concept of image-oriented advertising—advertising which has to be as imaginative as the editorial material.

Phil believes his greatest accomplishment has been identifying and tapping each individual's talents. He has succeeded in doing this as well as keeping all of us working together as a team—sans egos!

CROW-SEGAL'S MANAGEMENT OFFICE—Summer 1986

It's another late night as I finish this article. I realize that I'm falling back into old habits—some things never change. Working on Zelo reminds me often of college days. I find myself editing copy at work (instead of in Dr. O'Sullivan's 9:00 class), intensely discussing articles, ads and photos over lunch at Wendy's (instead of in the Beanery), and wondering how I'm going to put on my "career" uniform and get to work by 8:00 a.m. (instead of donning mismatched sweats and racing to calculus class with wet hair).

All of us on the Zelo staff feel the nervous excitement over whether or not all the pieces, when assembled, will really be a magazine that works. And how long will it keep working? The never-ending cycle of planning and production literally never stops. The day the final pages go to the printer is the day you start on the next issue. And so it goes!

What Zelo has done for all of us is to fulfill an unending desire to learn, create, and master the arts. It has given us a chance to direct our energies into something we believe in and share a strong commitment to. That desire was inspired and nurtured at Rollins and lives on today in "zealous" form where it started . . . in Winter Park.

For subscription information, write to ZELO, 1133 W. Morse Blvd., Winter Park, FL 32789. Phone: (305) 629-2502.

THE STAFF

The initial success of Zelo is largely due to the commitment of the 25 Rollins alumni on the magazine's staff who, while holding "real" and in most cases full-time jobs, are volunteering their skills to the publication in their "spare time."

Phil Pyster '81, Editor. Former editor of the Sandspur, Phil is Vice President of Publications for Crow-Segal Management Company.

Straumanis named Dean of the Faculty

Joan Straumanis, formerly Academic Dean at Kenyon College in Ohio, has been named Dean of the Faculty at Rollins College. Straumanis will be responsible for the undergraduate curriculum, faculty recruitment and faculty development.

A professor of philosophy, Straumanis has been Academic Dean at Kenyon since 1982, and previously was professor of philosophy and department chair at Denison University in Granville, Ohio. While at Denison she helped to establish one of the first women's studies programs in the country (1972). The program has since become a model for other colleges and a graduation requirement for all students at Denison.

She was the first female full professor at Kenyon, and as Academic Dean helped to develop academic computing, a five-year double degree program in teacher education and a school-college articulation program for gifted high school students.

This summer she has served on the staff of the Eli Lilly Endowment Workshop on the Liberal Arts in Colorado Springs. She represented both Kenyon and Rollins at the Oberlin Science Conference, a meeting of 50 college presidents and deans who are working to strengthen science teaching and research at liberal arts colleges. She has served as a program officer of the National Science Foundation, a member of the Congressional Fellowship Committee of the American Philosophical Association, and a member of the Higher Education

Straumanis

Committee of the Northwest Area Foundation.

Curricular innovations led by Straumanis have included women's studies, international studies and computing. Her own research interests include philosophy of biology and especially the current issue of the ethics of pre-determining the gender of human infants. [R]

Disney and Crummer combine efforts on international program

The importance of having a strong international business component in an MBA curriculum is being recognized by business schools across the country. Among them is the Roy E. Crummer Graduate School of Business at Rollins, which spent two years developing a sophisticated international business program for its Executive MBA students.

The international program was originally scheduled to be held in France in cooperation with a graduate business school located on the outskirts of Paris. Six weeks before the initial class was scheduled to depart for Europe, however, acts of terrorism forced a decision to cancel the trip.

Although there was considerable disappointment among Crummer officials and the students who were to participate in the program, the situation resulted in the development of an alternative plan for an exciting and innovative approach to teaching international business at home.

Dr. Martin Bell, EMBA Director, and Rick Johnson, Program Manager at Walt Disney World and a 1984 EMBA graduate, quickly formulated a plan for a course that would provide the executive students with exposure to key issues and concepts in international management as well as a taste of the international business culture. Crummer was to develop the course concept, recruit high-level executives with international experience, and provide the case instructors. The Disney organization was to provide the international setting at its World Showcase Pavilions at EPCOT Center and speakers, both cultural and business executives, from other nations.

On June 15, 1986, 25 EMBA students checked into the Hyatt Hotel in Orlando for the intensive week-long international program. The course integrated the cultural and decision-making considerations involved in international management. Students gained insight into the business practices in other countries as well as the cultural conditions that affect them. The blending of authentic cultural exposure, personal contact with high-level executives, and in-depth analysis of decision-oriented cases created a uniquely powerful treatment of international management, offering an experience that even an overseas visit might not have provided.

The executive students studied five nations: Japan, Mexico, Germany, England and China. Mornings were devoted to cultural orientations and visits to the pavilions. Afternoon sessions included case discussions moderated by guest professor Dr. Prakesh Sethi, Management Professor at the City University of New York and an international consultant. Senior executives and Crummer faculty participated with the students in these case discussions. The international flavor of the program was enhanced with meals served in authentic international restaurants.

By all reports, the international business program was highly successful. Disappointment over the cancelled trip to Europe turned into a marvelous experiential learning opportunity for EMBA students, faculty, and international executives. [R]

A happy dilemma: Which top law school to attend?

When she graduated from Rollins in May at the age of 20, Kim Richards faced an important decision. Would she take the scholarship offered at Harvard, Georgetown, or the University of Chicago Law School?

Actually, she was accepted at seven schools—"Seven out of the seven I applied to. That was really kind of neat," says Richards, whose family lives in Casselberry, Florida. Her accomplishment is put into perspective by noting that the Harvard Law School accepted only about 300 of the 5,000 students who applied for admission. And those students were simply applying to enter the prestigious American school—not particularly for scholarships.

Why is Richards in so much demand? She thinks it's partly because of her grade point average, 3.84 (she was an honor student her entire four years at Rollins). She lists other reasons as well. "I had good test scores. I test well. I was involved in a lot of extra-curricular activities. That helps. I'm also black and female. That helps, too," she says. Richard's law school aptitude test was in the 97th percentile, which was one factor that prompted so many schools to woo her.

Richards, who is interested in music as well as law, comes from a professional family background. Her father is a cardiovascular surgeon and her mother is an internist. "The whole idea of entering a profession is strong in my family," she says.

Richards became interested in international relations (her major at Rollins, while her minor was music) and decided sometime during high school that she would become a lawyer. She sees herself practicing international law someday, perhaps even serving as an ambassador. But that would require a change of citizenship as she is officially a Canadian, having lived in Toronto as a child.

Richards has been playing the piano since she was five years old and thought seriously about music as a career, but decided it was too lonely an existence. "Performance is nice, but practicing gets tiring. There's a lot of loneliness in it," she says.

At Rollins, Richards was very active in music-related activities. She helped write an original musical for the College's Centennial celebration. She also performed in various piano recitals and sang in the Chapel Choir.

As a student, she was active on the Student Hearing Board, which judges disciplinary action for students violating school policies, was a student ambassador, and was involved in various student tutoring projects.

"I liked being involved with the school because it is my school. Rollins is still trying to shed the party image and has gotten rid of a lot of it. I wanted to be involved in having people take the College as a more serious school," she says.

Richards first saw Rollins only a few weeks after she moved to Florida and says she "loved it at first sight."

When she graduated from high school at the age of 16, the decision of where to go to college was easy. Actually, she admits, that decision was a lot easier than the one she faced choosing between Harvard, Georgetown and Chicago.

And the lucky school is . . . Harvard. [R]

Student's language ability helps win Fulbright

His skill at languages is such that after only a summer's study of German in Vienna, he was able to enroll in the regular curriculum of German-speaking classes at the Institute for European Studies. That ability to quickly master other languages helped 1986 Rollins graduate William A. Wood win a much-coveted Fulbright grant to study Arabic in Jordan this year. "From what I understand, the Fulbright people found I learned German very quickly and thought I could take full advantage of studying Arabic," says Wood.

Only 2500 Fulbright Scholarships are given each year. Candidates have to be approved by both the United States Information Agency and the host country. Wood was a candidate for the Rhodes Scholarship and Valedictorian for the Rollins Class of 1986.

The 21-year-old Wood, who graduated with a 4.0 grade point average, envisions his nine months in Jordan learning standard spoken Arabic as a part of his unusual planned career. He has taken his pre-med courses, but majored in philosophy at Rollins. His goal is to find a career combining medicine, philosophy and medical ethics. "I've always wanted to study philosophy and was always interested in medicine in high school, so I thought this might be a way to combine them," he says. Wood is particularly interested in medical ethics internationally. "What happens when Western medicine meets developing countries with their own indigenous medicine? . . .

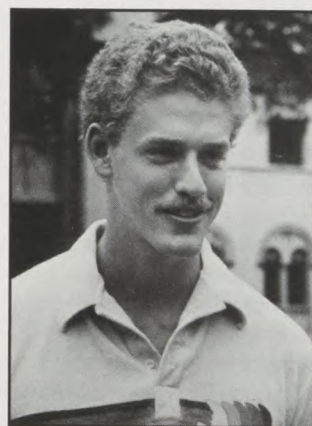

I could see myself ideally in 10 years being someplace in the developing world, maybe setting up medical programs, but in non-traditional ways," he comments.

Wood is obviously not concerned about going to the Middle East in the midst of new waves of anti-Americanism and more terrorism tensions worldwide. "Jordan is a fairly controlled country and there hasn't been any terrorism there. It's safer there than in Europe," he says. Jordan has also been traditionally a pro-Western country, with many of its top leaders educated in England and the United States.

Wood, who lives in Washington, D.C., has a younger sister who is a student at Kalamazoo College. His father is an insurance broker and his mother is a piano teacher.

After graduating from high school, Wood was offered scholarships by several prestigious colleges and decided on Rollins. "Out of all the schools I visited, I was most impressed by the quality of the faculty here," he says.

At Rollins, Wood was active on the crew team, rowing for up to three hours a day on Lake Maitland. He also served on the World Hunger Committee and was active in school publications such as the yearbook, where he was section editor. He has written for the Rollins Alumni Record, including an article on the College's South African divestiture policy and an article appearing in this issue of the magazine on Auschwitz.

Wood

Wood enjoys listening to classical music, attending local concerts, and reading German novels, particularly those of contemporary authors such as Gunter Grass. Many of the books he reads are in German.

His senior thesis was on the German 20th century philosopher Martin Heidegger, who died in 1976.

One of four Fulbright Scholarship recipients who will be studying in Jordan this year, Wood spent the summer preparing for his trip by taking an intensive course in Arabic at Georgetown University in Washington. The scholarship—named after the late Arkansas Senator William Fulbright and set up to help promote world understanding—will pay him $9,000 over the nine-month period. [R]

The Freshman Formula: Academic Quality + Diversity + Leadership

“Had I written a dream scenario for our progress in admissions in one year, I would never have been so bold as to suggest what happened in reality,” said David Erdmann, Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid.

When Erdmann arrived at Rollins just over a year ago, his top priority became the achievement of greater academic quality and diversity in the class which would enter Rollins in September 1986. By any measure one chooses to apply, Rollins experienced a most successful admissions year, one which surpassed the College's greatest expectations.

Rollins was successful in reaching its targeted enrollment for September 1986 of 390 freshmen and 50 transfer students. “In shaping the Class of '90,” explained Erdmann, “we gave special attention to improving the overall academic quality of the class, preserving geographic and ethnic diversity that adds so much to the Rollins experience, and maintaining a strong component of leadership and athletic strength. In most of these areas, we were very successful.”

Academic quality of the student body is a topic of much discussion at Rollins and other prestigious colleges, and there is often disagreement as to how that quality is best measured. “This year we decided to put our emphasis on academic ‘attitude,’ ” said

Erdmann. “That is, we were looking for students who had demonstrated in the classroom an interest in and commitment to their studies.” Particular attention was given to level of courses taken, grades received, and rank in class. 38% of this year's entering freshmen graduated in the top fifth of their high school class, while 76% graduated in the top half. These figures represent a substantial improvement over previous years.

Although academic attitude took priority over aptitude in the selection process, the mean SAT scores for the entering class also show improvement over previous years. The average SAT verbal score for the class is 500, while the average math score is 539.

According to Erdmann, the success in establishing the academic quality of the Class of 1990 was the result of having a larger applicant pool from which to select the class. This year Rollins received 1,980 applications for the 390 available spaces in the freshman class. The 1,980 applications, representing a 13.7% increase over last year, were generated by a lot of hard work on the part of the Admissions staff. The staff visited 390 high schools around the country, participated in 43 major college fairs, sponsored 10 fall receptions in eastern cities for prospective students and their parents, interviewed 1,380 students on campus, and sent more than 105,000 pieces of mail to prospects, applicants and constituents.

When a college has as strong an applicant pool as Rollins did this year, the opportunity exists to shape the class to meet a variety of institutional needs. While academics were certainly the priority, other factors were considered as well.

Geographic diversity has always given strength and character to the Rollins student body, and this year is no exception. Students in the entering freshman class hail from 38 states and territories and 10 foreign countries.

The class brings with it considerable athletic potential as well. Many excellent student-athletes were referred to the College, and Admissions worked closely with the Athletic Department to insure that the needs of all sports teams were met. ►

"The one area in which we experienced a minor disappointment was in the achievement of an ethnic diversity for the Class of '90," commented Erdmann. "While our international students add considerably to the range of ethnic backgrounds, we fell short of our hopes for the number of Asian, Hispanic and Black students enrolling in the class." According to Erdmann, other institutions with which Rollins competes for these students experienced similar shortfalls.

"Much of our success in admissions this year can be directly attributed to the quality and dedication of our admissions staff," said Erdmann. "Over the past year, we have succeeded in building an admissions team that any college would envy." Brenda Perry is the only administrative staff member who was with the office prior to Erdmann's arrival; Carinne Meyn '84, Sue Schillinger and Mike Short came on board a year ago, and 1986 Rollins graduates Julie Beckman and Bill Peisner joined Admissions in July. The five members of the operations staff—Betty Archer, Yvonne Barton '87, Jan Persons, Paula Simonds and Terri Sutton—collectively offer 44 years of experience in the Rollins Admissions Office.

One successful admissions year does not necessarily mean that another will follow. Each year a new generation of college-bound students must be educated about the advantages of a Rollins education. The admissions staff will work even harder this fall to identify and communicate with students for whom Rollins is a good choice . . . students who would benefit from as well as enhance the unique Rollins community. Alumni can play a major role in assisting Admissions efforts by referring to Rollins the names of qualified individuals, by making certain that students of college-going age are aware of the College and its special educational environment, and by becoming involved in the admissions activities sponsored by the various Rollins Alumni Clubs throughout the country. Rollins professor performs in Carnegie Hall

Since her three-and-a-half-year residency in Oslo, Norway, Sylvia Reynolds, accomplished pianist and concert performer, has kept close ties with some of Norway's leading musicians. She was asked to join Norway's leading oboist, Brynjar Hoff, in presenting a concert at Carnegie Recital Hall in New York on May 5. The concert was sponsored by the Royal Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and included works by some of Norway's contemporary composers.

In addition, Reynolds has been invited to teach a two-month course at the Norwegian Ballet College in Oslo in the spring of 1987.

Reynolds, who joined the Rollins faculty in 1982, holds a bachelor's degree from Peabody Conservatory, a master's degree from the Julliard School of Music, and a doctorate from the University of Kansas. Her teaching duties include piano literature, piano performance and musicianship. [R]

ROLLINS FUND REPORT

Listen Up, Alumni!

by James H. Robinson, Jr. '55
Alumni Fund General Chairman

The 1985/86 Rollins Fund reached its $1.1 million goal . . . but just barely. The final count on May 31 was $1,100,247. The final week of the campaign was extremely tense as some urgent phone calls brought in a few large gifts ranging from $1,000 to $5,000 and an evening of calling outstanding alumni pledgees resulted in sufficient dollars arriving to put us over the goal.

There is some good news to report. Total alumni gifts exceeded the $440,000 goal by $25,703. The dollars represent a 34% increase over the previous year, a most significant jump.

The negative side is that 1) over 500 alumni pledges totaling $23,000 were not paid by May 31; 2) almost all unpaid pledges were in the $25-$100 range; and 3) although 1,205 new alumni gifts were received, an equal number who gave in '84/'85 did not renew, so we netted only 18 more alumni donors this year.

What's my point? We have to change this pattern of giving in our alumni ranks. Our percentage of participation remains static year after year and is far below the average of most colleges like Rollins. We have to depend on a few substantial gifts from the same donors each year, and those few individuals will not be able to carry the Rollins Fund indefinitely.

It is time to spread the responsibility of supplying the College with operating funds among thousands more of our alumni. We are quick to bask in the warmth of the praise being given Rollins by national media. Now let's back up that pride with a concrete expression of our support—a gift to the Rollins Fund.

Every gift is meaningful! Many alumni seem to think that if they are not able to give at the $1,000 level, their gifts don't count. Well, just look again at the number of unpaid pledges and how they add up to substantial dollars. More importantly, the small gifts significantly affect the participation figures. That in turn makes a great difference when the College applies for foundation grants. Foundations' decisions are swayed by the numbers of graduates who support their alma mater. It makes sense.

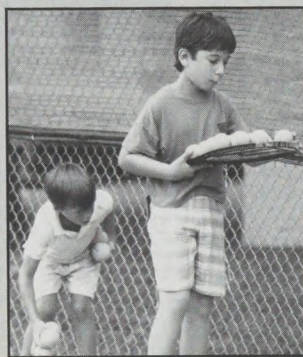

As we delve into the 1986-87 Rollins Fund year, we have a new challenge before us of reaching an increased goal of $1.3 million by May 31, 1987. I ask each and every alumna and alumnus to put Rollins on your priority list of worthy causes for charitable gifts. Others did it for us when we were students. Now it's our turn.

Please add your name to the donor list this year, and keep it there every year thereafter. Rollins needs our support if it is to continue in the successful path that has brought it into the lime-light of national press.

Your support is needed and appreciated. [R]

The Spirit of Summer at Rollins

The Rollins campus flourished with activity this summer as the College hosted a series of programs for both the young and "young at heart." Activities ranged from a summer day camp for children sponsored by the Division of Non-Credit Programs to the Elderhostel educational program for adults over 60. We sent our photographer out and about to capture the spirit of summer at Rollins.

SCE NEWS

A new yet familiar name

"School of Continuing Education" is once again the title of the College's 36-year-old adult education program as a result of a decision made by the Rollins College Board of Trustees in May. The Trustees reinstituted Continuing Education as one of two schools of the College, an action that affirms the progress and strength of the program as well as its educational mission.

New on-site corporate program launched

The Orlando Central Park facility of Martin Marietta Aerospace is the location of Rollins' second on-site program offering classes to corporate personnel. Whether working toward a degree or taking a class or two for personal enrichment, Martin employees now have the option of earning academic credit at their workplace. Choices for Fall 1986 include Supervision, Industrial Psychology, Business and Professional Presentations, and Public Relations. Rollins' successful on-site program at Walt Disney World is now entering its eleventh year. Such programs reflect a cooperative and innovative spirit between SCE and major employers in Central Florida.

Enrollment is up . . . again!

The weather wasn't the only "hot" topic in Winter Park this summer. The School of Continuing Education boasted an extremely successful summer session, with enrollment figures up 12% over the previous summer.

Organizational behavior . . . an innovative choice

SCE students may now select organizational behavior as an academic major. Rooted in the Department of Psychology, this new major should appeal to people with an interest in the industrial/organizational specialty of that discipline. It addresses such issues as organizational dynamics and change, organizational development, and individual motivation. The organizational behavior major has received enthusiastic support from both students and their employers. Unique in Central Florida, it was developed in consultation with corporate executives and other organizational specialists to ensure its relevance and usefulness. Now that Bob Smither has arrived on campus to lend his innovative leadership to the program, the organizational behavior major should become a cornerstone of the School of Continuing Education.

Humanities Foundation Course . . . an academic common ground

This fall marks the beginning of a new core course requirement in the humanities for SCE students . . . a "must" class that promises intellectual challenge, interactive learning, analytical thinking and shared experiences that will reinforce a sense of community among learners. The interdisciplinary team-taught course will examine a contemporary topic of interest by incorporating works of the various humanities, such as art, music, philosophy, history, literature, religion and theater. Professors from these disciplines will lead a discussion about the works and philosophies of the great minds of the past and present. The class theme for the 1986-87 year is Human Freedom, and the professors are Hoyt Edge, Laura Greyson, John Heath and Barry Levis. This special program is funded in part by a three-year grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The patio behind the Student Center was decorated with a Caribbean theme for the Continuing Education Spring Picnic in May. Enjoying the spirit of the evening were (l.) Sandy Phillips-Riggs, Director of the Rollins Fund, and professor Barry Levis and (r.) Pat Tuttle Crouse and Jon Dozier.

ACE . . . a new organization for alumni

Inspired by the success of SCE's 25th anniversary celebration last September, several key volunteers have formed the Alumni of Continuing Education (ACE). Operating under the umbrella of the Central Florida Alumni Club, ACE was developed to increase awareness and appreciation of Continuing Education at Rollins College, and to provide a special way for Continuing Education alumni to maintain ties with the College. ACE officers for 1986-87 are: Ralph Elliott '72, Chairman; Cary Riggs, Vice Chairman, Student Activities; Pat Barkley '83, Vice Chairman; Joan Jakubcin '83, Program Chairman; Stephanie Wilks '72, Secretary; and Bob Pettigrew '72, Treasurer. A number of ACE special events are being planned for this year. Additional information will be forthcoming. For information on ACE programs and how you can become involved, contact Sally Combs at the Alumni House, Campus Box 2736, Rollins College, Winter Park, FL 32789; (305) 646-2266.

SCE student, alumnus receive Rotary scholarships

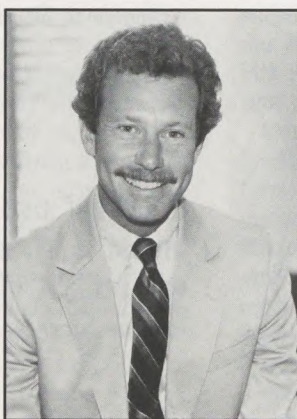

Dawn Chesko and Allen Rejonis will be spending the 1986-87 school year studying abroad and serving as Rotary Ambassadors after being awarded Rotary Scholarships. Rotary selects its scholarship candidates based on ambassadorship, leadership and academic qualities. Dawn, a Participant Relations hostess for Exxon Co. at Walt Disney World, will be studying communications at The Polytechnic Of Wales in Pontypridd, Wales. She plans to receive a bachelor's degree in Communication Arts from SCE in the fall of 1987. Dawn has been a Disney cast member since 1979. Allen's scholarship will award him the opportunity to study language and international business in Spain or France. Allen has worked for Disney as a Seminar Productions cast member since 1981. He received his BA in Communication Arts from SCE in 1985.

Wasserman new to SCE staff

Arthur G. Wasserman was recently appointed Director of Development for the School of Continuing Education. In his new position he will be responsible for soliciting major gifts and corporate donations for SCE. Wasserman comes to Rollins from Gettysburg College in Gettysburg, PA, where he was Director of Annual Giving. Prior to holding that position, he served the institution as Assistant Director of Development for Special Support Programs. A 1980 graduate of Dickinson College in Carlisle, PA, Wasserman holds an AB in Anthropology and a minor in Spanish.

The School of Continuing Education graduated 116 students at commencement exercises on May 24. Orlando's Mayor Bill Frederick was guest speaker at the event.

Master of Liberal Studies program in planning stages

Beginning in the Fall of 1987, the Master of Liberal Studies (MLS) degree will be offered through the School of Continuing Education. The new program, to be taught during evening hours by members of the full-time Rollins faculty, will emphasize the philosophies and theories of great books and thinkers from both historical and contemporary perspectives. This creative graduate degree should have wide appeal to Rollins alumni as well as other Central Florida residents. Materials about the MLS will be available in February and the first class will be accepted in the spring. Admission to the program will be based on academic performance at the BA/BS level, a personal interview, and written statements from applicants. [R]

DOLLARS & SENSE

When she established the Kathryn and Harry Schwindt endowment in memory of her mother and in honor of her father, Kathryn Schwindt Zufall created a highly personal tribute to her parents. Although her family had no direct ties with Rollins, she chose the College as the recipient because of the excellence of its Department of Music, the instruction it offered in personal finance, and its proximity to the Florida community where her parents lived.

Mrs. Zufall's first stipulation was that the College establish the Harry Schwindt Prize to be awarded annually to Rollins piano students who excelled in improvisation, sightreading or transposition. She described her father as an extraordinarily gifted musician who graciously shared his talent every day of his life by playing for friends at home, at Sunday school, for parties, community fundraising shows and civic organizations. "He can make a tune sound like a march or two-step, like a hymn or a lullaby. He can accompany in any key."

The first recipient of the Harry Schwindt Prize in 1983 was John Kavanaugh '83, who composed the Rollins Centennial musical "Marvelous Place" and is now working for Walt Disney. The second was Douglas Brockington '84, headed for graduate school with plans to become a music teacher. Although only a junior, Jennifer Marino '86 won the award in 1985 for her exceptional progress after transferring to Rollins that year. Last spring there were two recipients: for the second time Jennifer Marino '86, who will attend graduate school to become a music therapist, and Kim Richards '86, who was accepted by five of the top law schools in the country. In making the presentation in 1986, Mrs. Zufall spoke of her father, who had died in 1985, calling the Harry Schwindt Prize "a little piece of immortality to assure that one of Pop's best qualities will be remembered always."

of the Rollins faculty: Associate Professor Sylvia Reynolds, a concert pianist in her own right who teaches the student recipients of the Harry Schwindt Prize, and Associate Professor Kenna Taylor, who gives a course in personal economics and is writing a book on that subject. Mrs. Schwindt, who greatly enjoyed her husband's playing, and Mr. Schwindt, an astute businessman who handled his own finances well, would have approved of these choices, their daughter felt.

Mrs. Zufall used long-term, appreciated International Business Machines stock to make her gift. By giving it directly to Rollins she avoided paying any capital gains tax and was able to deduct the full fair market value of the stock at the time of the contribution. Also, once invested with the College's other endowment funds, the dividends the original stock had been earning more than doubled.

The best use of life is to invest it in something which will outlast life.

William James

Last spring another daughter permanently linked her mother's name with Rollins by establishing four Book-A-Year memorials for her. A minister friend knowing of the College's Congregational roots, suggested that Mary Hays Risley consider a memorial at Rollins for her mother, Iva Hays Crosley. The Book-A-Year program seemed ideal because Mrs. Crosley was an avid reader and her daughter knew that books are at the heart of the educational experience at a college like Rollins.

The College's Book-A-Year program was established over 50 years ago by Edwin Grover, appointed "Professor of Books" at Rollins by President Hamilton Holt. Since then over 2,500 complete memberships and memorials have been established and $500,000 added to the library's endowment for the purchase of books. Once an endowment is completed at $250, a bookplate giving the name of the honoree and that of the donor is placed in each volume purchased from the fund. Mrs. Risley's gift will be recognized with the new bookplate showing the dolphin and pineapple motifs of the Olin Library.

If you would like to establish a memorial or tribute to a family member or friend at Rollins, a member of the Taxwise Giving Committee will be glad to work with you to plan an appropriate and lasting remembrance at the College. Write to the Taxwise Giving Committee at Rollins College, Campus Box 2724, Winter Park, Florida 32789 or call 305-646-2606. [R]

BOOKS

WOMEN IN THE RESISTANCE

By Margaret L. Rossiter. Praeger Press, New York, © 1986, 251 pages.

When Virginia Roush received her degree from Rollins in 1935, she set out for New York and graduate work at Columbia University, intending a career as a teacher. She could not, however, return to Winter Park for her tenth class reunion. By then she had married a young French aristocrat and became Virginia d'Albert Lake, served bravely with a secret British intelligence group aiding the French Resistance, been desperately ill-treated in Paris by Gestapo captors, and survived the notorious horrors of the Ravensbruck concentration camp and its SS guards where she had been transported to die. Sent to Leibenau by the Nazis in the war's last weeks, she was liberated by French troops on April 21, 1945. For her valor, the French government awarded her the Croix de Guerre and the Medal of the Resistance; the Belgians granted the Medal of King Leopold; Britain made her a Member of the British Empire, and America granted the Medal of Freedom with bronze palm. Rollins granted her its Medal of Honor in 1947.

Virginia Roush d'Albert Lake's remarkable story is one of many tales of women's heroic wartime efforts recounted by Margaret C. Rossiter in Women in the Resistance. An historian on the faculty of Eastern Michigan University, Rossiter conducted exhaustive research in French archives and American military records to reconstruct the lost history of those French, Belgian, and American women who were caught up in the web of publications, underground escape routes, and sabotage that made up the resistance to the Nazi occupation. Rossiter's work also depends on interviews with living survivors and men who knew them. Even CIA records of its famous wartime forebear, the OSS, yielded useful accounts, though Rossiter notes drily that those files were closed to her until she sued under the Freedom of Information Act and waited out four years of official delays.

Although itself a bit gushy, Rossiter's book is helpful for bringing some realism to our vision of the Resistance. Nurtured by countless films (consider both the classic "Casablanca" and the recent movie-within-a-movie in "Kiss of the Spider Woman"), our picture of the Resistance emphasizes its glamour. We see dashing young heroes in terrific trench-coats waiting for secret assignments in the dark streets of Paris—usually in the rain. Where women appear in this romanticized Resistance, they are young, and beautiful, normally night club singers with feathered hats who trick gullible (but handsome) German officers into betraying major military secrets. Or, finally, we imagine ourselves among the daring maquis, a nearly all-male fraternity camped in the hills above Paris, somehow always with a good supply of wine, waiting for a chance to assassinate the evil collaborator who has raped the village schoolteacher. My own fantasy choice was to be the Meryl Streep character fighting with the men in the hills, because I prefer slacks to beaded evening gowns and dry hills to rainy streets.

The real Resistance and real women Rossiter portrays quickly dissolve those images. The women of the Resistance actually came from all classes, political parties, age groups, and regions. They were more likely to be middle-aged married women than the young and beautiful, and the work they did was closer to everyday bourgeois existence than to nightlife. They lived not only in Paris, but in rural hotels on the escape routes through the mountains into Spain, or in villages throughout the coastal regions where German patrols watched for escapes by sea. They were housewives, nuns, university professors, and innkeepers, motivated by politics or simple patriotism, and often performing the least glamorous but demanding and dangerous tasks. Their lives could be lonely and they were always at risk.

Most characteristic of these ordinary yet extraordinary women were those who kept what were called "safehouses" or served as guides to smuggle out of France the downed pilots or crew members of British and American airplanes sent over occupied France to bomb or spy. It was vitally important to the Allies to rescue survivors of crashes or German anti-aircraft guns, not out of simple humanity, but because their training represented time and a financial investment which were costly to replace. Britain wanted a pilot back quickly because he cost so much to produce. So hundreds of French women risked their lives to locate and tend those who parachuted to ground, linking them with routes to safety through Spain or back across the Channel.

The tasks these women faced were formidable, and the risks extended to family members and children as well as themselves. Safehouse keepers had to find extra food and, sometimes, medical supplies in a time of strict rationing, and needed to scrounge French clothes to replace tell-tale uniforms. Finding shoes for oversize American feet was especially daunting. Guides traveled endlessly with escapees (called "Joes") on unheated trains, hoping to elude detection by the Gestapo with forged papers for their charges and with ingenuity when police tried to converse with counterfeit Frenchmen who spoke only English. So many of them used the stratagem of carrying documents declaring a Joe a deaf-mute that even the dullest police caught on, and new tricks had to be invented. They also had to tutor Americans and Britons into acting French—smoking cigarettes down to nubs and, unlike one hapless G.I., remembering not to offer a light to a German officer with a Zippo lighter.

The risks such women took were real and deadly. Rossiter lets us know of the many who were tortured by the Gestapo to reveal the members of their networks, and the appalling number who were, like d'Albert Lake, sent to Ravensbruck to die of overwork and malnutrition. Their risks of betrayal were constant, for the Gestapo offered rewards and special privileges to French citizens who informed on resisters. Further, such women risked their families as well as themselves, for arrest would surely separate them from children and, beginning in 1942, the Family Hostage Law permitted the Gestapo to hold children or other kin when a suspected woman resister could not be found.

Other women described by Rossiter shared such risks but performed other tasks as spies or saboteurs. Their stories can startle us with the casual risks taken by such amateurs, but also by their extraordinary successes and careful skill. We are reminded that very few of these women received any kind of training for their work when we read, for example, that when Nicole de Hauteclouque traveled to Paris to code and decode radio messages, the leader of her small group took her to dinner at a lively restaurant, cheerfully noting that another radio officer with whom he had dined there had just been arrested. Astonishingly, the police surveillance missed her and her genial if careless host. On the other hand, a woman known as Marie Madeleine directed an espionage group with superb technical skills. They were able to provide to the Allies a detailed map of German defenses around the Cotentin peninsula in Normandy, the site of America's critical landing. Another "amateur" spy, Jeannie Rousseau, discovered the secret that Germany was producing V-1 and V-2 bombs at Peenemunde. Her warning about the V-2 gave Britain ten months warning before the feared V-2 began to rain on England. A few women even acted out in real life the stuff of movie romance, like Marguerite Petitjean, who traveled as a chic lady in first-class railroad cars while transporting plastic explosives in the fashionable padded shoulders of her fur coat.

Rossiter's accounts of such exploits perform two important tasks: they restore the women of the Resistance to their rightful place in history, and they let us know about the real efforts which underlay movie fictions. Yet she also leaves some of her historical work unfinished, for Rossiter is curiously silent on certain crucial issues. She does not, for example, examine how the prewar experiences of her subjects differentiated them from other women who did not serve the Resistance after the German occupation. Why these particular women and not others? Similarly, and strangely given the progress of women's history in recent years, she nowhere explicitly analyzes what Resistance tasks women could perform more easily than their male counterparts. We learn only incidentally that women couriers could evade detection more easily than men because they could present themselves as housewives conducting normal shopping or visiting. Finally, Rossiter is vague on how most of her women learned the skills they would use in their Resistance efforts. What prewar experiences did they have which taught them how to organize a secret network of information or supplies?

Overall, however, Rossiter tells an exciting story of a wide variety of women who for personal or principled reasons found themselves active participants in what amounted to a secret war. Our own Virginia Roush d'Albert Lake, who began her work out of personalized sympathy for a single American soldier and from a youthful sense of adventure, was not atypical. Out of a simple beginning, she and her husband found themselves vital links in an escape line which helped hundreds. Surely she never expected to find herself leading American flyers through a wood towards a secret forest camp, nor did she know she had the courage to protect the identity and safety of her charges when her own arrest and imprisonment took place. We now know what she did, and can take pride in her uncomplicated courage. [R]

The Olin Library
Rollins College

One of the most enduring and rewarding traditions of Rollins College is the endowment of a book fund, in perpetuity, in memory of or in honor of a relative or friend. An appropriate bookplate is placed in each volume purchased.

Individual donations of $10.00 or more will be held until at least $250 is reached; the income from this endowment purchases a book each year. A gift to Book-A-Year fund is a thoughtful way to commemorate a special occasion or memorialize a family member or friend while helping to build the Library's endowment.

THE LAST WORD

As American as Apple Pie

BY MALLIE ROWE DiBACCO '62

Today we are known as the "Me Society," and for the most part that term is accurate. We are concerned about our bills, our place in society, our business education in order to make money. "Me" comes first. But it has not always been that way, nor does it have to remain so. Philanthropy is as American as apple pie, which brings to mind a vignette of some years ago.

The Winter Haven Newspaper Society Page read "Miss M. Z. Rowe will present a recital at the reception hall of the Episcopal Church on April 3, 1958. She cordially invites all the community to attend. There is no admission charge and refreshments will be served." My voice teacher had insisted that a recital was a necessary element to becoming a singer—one who could sing many songs, in different languages, for an extended length of time. I was so concerned about that length that I insisted that there be no breaks between the groups of songs. I would sing everything straight through, to get it over with at its earliest moment. I can remember standing, enjoying the applause, pausing a few moments, nodding to the pianist to go on with the next selection and praying silently that I knew which selection it was and that my throat would not become too dry to continue. This was a job and I simply wanted to get it over with.

At the conclusion of my fourteen or so songs, a middle-aged woman came up to my mother. A few moments later the two of them walked in my direction. She was introduced to me. She complimented me on my selection, performance and ability to stand out there without a break for such a long time. She couldn't be very worldly, I reasoned, because she seemed to be unaware that it was not the thing to do ordinarily. My response to her was in true pre-womanly 17-year-old fashion, "Oh, you are too kind." Her response was succinct, "Kindness has nothing to do with it." During the brief conversation, she casually invited Mother and me to visit her "sometime." Because all Southerners, certainly in Central Florida, put forth such open invitations, I immediately forgot it. Later, however, Mother suggested one evening that we go out to visit the "recital lady."

I confess that it was not something that I looked forward to. After all, I was invited over to Alta's house for a pajama party, and what was I to say if I were late? Mother persevered and won. Our lady friend was lovely and very hospitable. I was unsure if we were supposed to be there and felt a bit uncomfortable. At the first lull in the rather longish Southern conversation, I indicated that it was necessary to leave for I had "another previous engagement." My Mother's look could have killed. Our hostess, however, was a mother and must have understood my perilous balance on adulthood. As we actually got up to leave, she reached down from her desk and opened a drawer, withdrawing a ledger-sized check book. Without speaking, she began to write. She then handed a check to me, saying "I want you to go to Rollins and pursue your training. I want you to be able to be just like all the other students with a little spending money. There are no strings attached. You owe me nothing. This time next year, come to see me and we will do the same thing."

I looked down at the check from this unknown lady and, was for the first time, appropriately speechless. This philanthropist was my John Beresford Tipton, long before "The Millionaire" was a television success. My lady, too, was real and allowed me to attend Rollins in much the same fashion as the other students. She helped to make Rollins possible and for that I will be forever indebted. I hope to emulate her someday. [R]

Letters

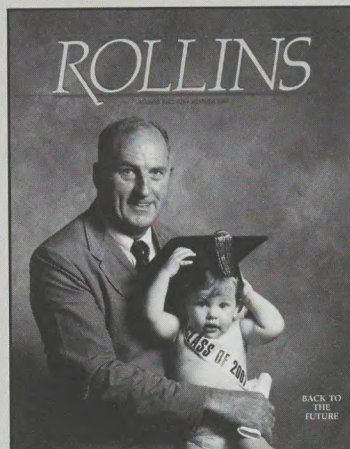

I want to congratulate you and your staff on the excellence of the recent issues of the Alumni Record. The quality and presentation of the publication are first rate and Barbara ('73) and I eagerly await each issue.

I was particularly touched by the recent interview with Jack Critchfield in the summer edition. I was active in student government in the turmoil of the 1970s and can remember numerous confrontations with the administration over what then seemed to be major issues. Yet, Jack Critchfield always was available to hear our views and made his best effort to either affect the changes he agreed with or argue persuasively against those he did not.

As someone who was at the surprise birthday party Jack referred to in the interview, I was moved that he would remember that event. I think it epitomizes the attitude of many of us at Rollins then—that while we may have had our differences on particular issues, we cared deeply about each other as individuals and about the unique community spirit that is the essence of Rollins.

Keep up the good work.

Dear Readers:

After a highly successful Centennial year, we've got big plans for the coming issues of the Rollins Alumni Record—more feature articles from faculty addressing the important issues of today, success stories about up-and-coming young alumni, career advice from local and national business leaders, and in-depth news about the College and its activities. We hope you will continue to welcome each new issue of the Record as we enter our second century.

This year, with your help, you will see some special visual changes in the magazine as well. We'd like to enhance our feature stories with improved art and photography and possibly add some inside color. To do this, we've created a special contribution fund specifically for development of the Rollins Alumni Record. While not a subscription per se (you'll receive the magazine whether you contribute or not), your tax deductible gift to the Record will be used solely to improve the quality of your alumni publication.

A "voluntary subscription" of any amount—we suggest $15.00—will let us know in a measurable way that you are enjoying the Record and will allow us to continue to bring you the quality publication you expect from your alma mater. Equally important to the development of the Record are your comments and suggestions about the magazine, so please take a moment to submit them on the form below. Many thanks!

—MWW

Enclosed is my tax deductible contribution of $ _____ for the Rollins Alumni Record.

Here are my comments and suggestions:

Please make your check payable to Rollins College. Your cancelled check will serve as a receipt. Mail to: Rollins Alumni Record, Campus Box 2736, Rollins College, Winter Park, FL 32789.

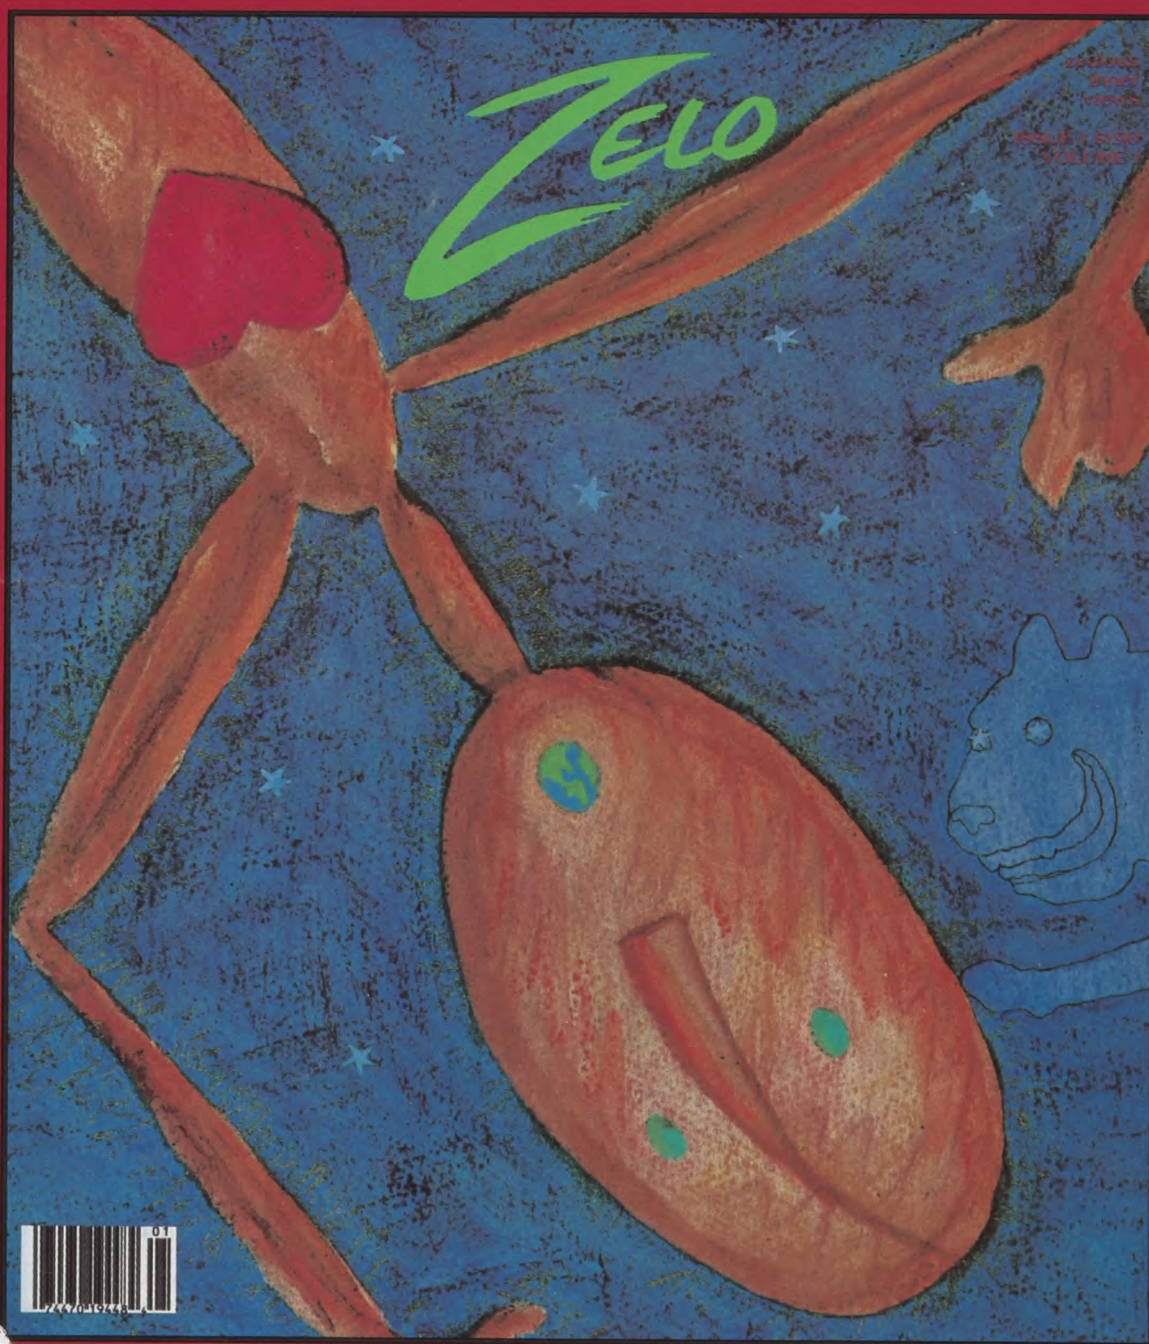

Are you receiving duplicate copies of the Record?

If so, please send us the mailing labels attached to the magazines (or jot down the identification numbers appearing on the labels) so we can correct our records and save the College some money. Mail to: Alumni House, Campus Box 2736, Rollins College, Winter Park, FL 32789. Thank you.
