VI. Adjournment
    Carol Lauer
PRESENT
Carol Lauer, Bob Smither, Jill Jones, Don Davison, Fiona Harper, Derrick Paladino, Elise Ablin.
Excused: Thomas Ouellette, Carol Bresnahan, and Craig McAllaster.

CALL TO ORDER
Carol Lauer called the meeting to order at 12:36 PM.

APPROVAL OF MINUTES FROM 12/4/14
EC unanimously approved the minutes from the 12/4/14 meeting as amended by Davison.

REPORTS

PRESIDENT OF A&S
Carol Lauer
EC will recommend Janis Hirsch ’72 as a potential commencement speaker.

The President and McLaughlin spoke to David Lord about continuing meetings between faculty and the Board this spring. Recommending two meetings with A&S faculty and one meeting with CPS faculty. Lauer will contact Lord to see which dates are available. One of the A&S meetings will be with untenured faculty and the other with tenured faculty. There is some concern with always separating the two groups and it was suggested that the segregation should not continue for the long term. Lauer stated that at prior meetings each group had very different agendas that were set by those who attended and feels that was very useful to the Board.

AAC
Jill Jones
No report. Jones will give a report about the GPA change for studying abroad at the next faculty meeting.

F&S
Don Davison
No new business other than the slightly revised resolution to allow faculty representation on the BOT committees. Lewin and Reich were particularly helpful in crafting the resolution.
PSC
Fiona Harper

PSC will review grant proposals on Wednesday, January 28th. On the agenda are changes to the faculty advisory committee for International Programs, researching Course and Instructor Evaluation (CIE) delivery, and the Diversity Council will visit to discuss the organization of different committees and how faculty are chosen to serve on them.

SLC
Derrick Paladino

Micki Meyer and Dylan Allen attended the last SLC meeting to discuss the issue of having an interfaith space on campus. SLC passed a resolution that supports the creation of a dedicated interfaith space in the Chapel and asks that EC craft a resolution to back them up. It will be discussed in New Business.

SGA
Elise Ablin

SGA drafted a resolution that would allow students to transfer their excess print pages allotment to their fellow students. The RAVE Guardian app is up and running on campus. Anyone with a Rollins e-mail address can download the app. RAVE allows you to set a safety timer and pick guardians. If you set a timer and don’t turn it off within the specified timeframe RAVE alerts your guardians and campus safety that you have not reached your destination so they can check in with you. This app is particularly useful to students, faculty, and staff who park off-campus or in the garage and are nervous about walking alone at night. SGA passed a resolution in support of an interfaith space in the Chapel.

REQUEST TO BOT FOR FACULTY REPRESENTATION
Carol Lauer

The Board is happy to allow the chairs of the various standing committees to attend BOT sub-committee meetings. Invitations have gone out for the February 19th meeting. The request for faculty representation on the BOT executive committee has been deferred until the Board can discuss it with the new president. McAllaster has said the Board may not approve that request because of the very confidential material discussed in executive committee meetings. EC will take this to the full faculty at the next meeting to see how they want to proceed.

SALARY STUDY UPDATE
Carol Lauer

The salary study is on the President’s desk. Lauer will make sure it is forwarded to Davison.

Davison said it appears to be a study of departmental averages by rank compared to CUPA departmental averages. One concern is that departmental averages will not tell anything about gender equity. Secondly, most departmental averages are close to the CUPA norm, but we have some very small departments with just 2-3 faculty. A single salary can easily distort the average. Finally, there is concern about how to display the study to faculty without breaching confidentiality.
COURSE RELEASE POLICY CHANGE UPDATE
Carol Lauer

EC would like a statement on the return to a two course release for untenured faculty from the one release policy that was approved by the BOT but never announced or applied. The President will consult with the College’s lawyer about the statement.

NEW BUSINESS

SLATE FOR ALL COLLEGE GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE
Carol Lauer

There are two grievances that will likely go to the All College Grievance Committee this year. One is a case of dismissal of a tenured faculty member. The other case concerns a faculty member who received a negative evaluation recommendation from the Provost, but received positive recommendations from the department and FEC.

The Appeals Committee should meet before the President makes his decision. Jones asked if this was an all-college committee. Lauer stated in the case of tenure and promotion, the Bylaws allow a faculty member to appeal to the A&S Appeals Committee if they feel they have been discriminated against or that procedures have not been followed. In any other case, the appeal goes to the All College Grievance Committee.

EC needs to bring a slate to the faculty meeting to elect two people to the Grievance Committee. Nominees must be full professors. Lauer will contact those being considered for nomination.

SLATE FOR HOLT SCHOOL WHITE PAPER GROUP
(see Attachment #1, below)

David Richard is putting together a brief report that focuses on its initiatives over the last three years and its direction. The purpose of the report is to provide a concise picture of Holt School operations and strategic direction. Richard is requesting faculty leadership to participate in the meetings that will identify priorities for the Holt School. Lauer will contact those being considered.

BY-LAWS ON DISMISSALS
Carol Lauer
(see Attachment #2, below)

We have a case of the dismissal of a tenured faculty member and our Bylaws are silent on these cases. According to Maria Martinez, none of the ACS schools mention in their Bylaws how you dismiss a tenured faculty member. In this case AAUP procedures were not followed. Lauer asked the President to speak with the College’s lawyer who states that because of the details of this case that administration handled it appropriately. Our Bylaws do say that if an issue is not addressed that we should defer to AAUP procedures. We might want to add a section to the Bylaws on dismissal of tenured faculty members that states that we defer to the 1958 statement in the AAUP. AAUP procedures do not not explain who should sit on the committee. EC believes it should be an ad-hoc committee comprised of 3-5 full professors. The slate would come from EC and be confirmed by the full faculty. Harper will research this issue to see what our Bylaws currently say and bring it to the next EC meeting. Davison asked what the goal is here. It seems the goals are 1) to make a statement to administration that they need to respect procedure, and 2) reassure faculty that we are vigilant about procedure.

CHANGES TO THE STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS FACULTY ADVISORY COMMITTEE
Carol Lauer
(see Attachment #3, below)

Lauer asked if we should bring these changes to the full faculty. Harper stated we cannot take it to the faculty until she hears from CPS.

CRITCHFIELD GRANT PROPOSAL QUESTIONS
Fiona Harper

Some faculty have raised questions about the distribution of funds and feel that full professors often receive less money. This term PSC will review grant proposals with all personally identifying information (name, rank, department, e-mail address) removed.

RESOLUTION FOR INTERFAITH SPACE
Derrick Paladino

EC resolution: EC supports the creation of a dedicated interfaith space in the Chapel as deemed by the Knowles agreement. EC unanimously voted to accept this resolution.

ADJOURNMENT
Carol Lauer

Lauer adjourned the meeting at 1:55 PM.
In anticipation of a new president coming on board, the Holt School will be putting together a brief report that focuses on its initiatives over the last three years and its direction. The purpose of the report is to provide a concise picture of Holt School operations and strategic direction. With regard to the latter, it is important that faculty have a voice in the direction of the Holt School and help to shape its future. To that end, I would like faculty leadership and select faculty (e.g., Holt School faculty directors) to participate in some “strategic thinking” meetings that will identify priorities for the Holt School moving forward. The results of these meetings will be distilled into the report and forwarded to the provost and the new president.

The report needs to be done by early to mid-March and ready for the incoming president. I’d appreciate your thoughts on faculty participation (how? who? etc.). Thanks.
AAUP 1958 statement on procedure

Procedural Recommendations

1. Preliminary Proceedings Concerning the Fitness of a Faculty Member. When reasons arise to question the fitness of a college or university faculty member who has tenure or whose term appointment has not expired, the appropriate administrative officers should ordinarily discuss the matter with the faculty member in personal conference. The matter may be terminated by mutual consent at this point; but if an adjustment does not result, a standing or ad hoc committee elected by the faculty and charged with the function of rendering confidential advice in such situations should informally inquire into the situation, to effect an adjustment, if possible, and, if none is effected, to determine whether in its view formal proceedings to consider the faculty member’s dismissal should be instituted. If the committee recommends that such proceedings should be begun, or if the president of the institution, even after considering a recommendation of the committee favorable to the faculty member, expresses the conviction that a proceeding should be undertaken, action should be commenced under the procedures that follow. Except where there is disagreement, a statement with reasonable particularity of the grounds proposed for the dismissal should then be jointly formulated by the president and the faculty committee; if there is disagreement, the president or the president’s representative should formulate the statement.

2. Commencement of Formal Proceedings. The formal proceedings should be commenced by a communication addressed to the faculty member by the president of the institution, informing the faculty member of the statement formulated, and also informing the faculty member that, at the faculty member’s request, a hearing will be conducted by a faculty committee at a specified time and place to determine whether he or she should be removed from the faculty position on the grounds stated. In setting the date of the hearing, sufficient time should be allowed the faculty member to prepare a defense. The faculty member should be informed, in detail or by reference to published regulations, of the procedural rights that will be accorded. The faculty member should state in reply whether he or she wishes a hearing, and, if so, should answer in writing, not less than one week before the date set for the hearing, the statements in the president’s letter.

3. Suspension of the Faculty Member. Suspension of the faculty member during the proceedings is justified only if immediate harm to the faculty member or others is threatened by the faculty member’s continuance. Unless legal considerations forbid, any such suspension should be with pay.

4. Hearing Committee. The committee of faculty members to conduct the hearing and reach a decision should be either an elected standing committee not previously concerned with the case or a committee established as soon as possible after the president’s letter to the faculty member has been sent. The choice of members of the hearing committee should be on the basis of their objectivity and competence and of the regard in which they are held in the academic community. The committee should elect its own chair.

5. Committee Proceeding. The committee should proceed by considering the statement of grounds for dismissal already formulated, and the faculty member’s response written before the time of the hearing. If the faculty member has not requested a hearing, the committee should consider the case on the basis of the obtainable information and decide whether the faculty member should be removed; otherwise, the hearing should go forward. The committee, in consultation with the president and the faculty member, should exercise its judgment as to whether the hearing should be public or private. If any facts are in dispute, the testimony of witnesses and other evidence concerning the matters set forth in the president’s letter to the faculty member should be received. The president should have the option of attendance during the hearing. The president may designate an appropriate representative to assist in developing the case; but the committee should determine the order of proof, should normally conduct the questioning of witnesses, and, if necessary, should secure the presentation of evidence important to the case. The faculty member should have the option of assistance by counsel, whose functions should be similar to those of the representative chosen by the president. The faculty member should have the additional procedural rights set forth in the 1940
Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure, and should have the aid of the committee, when needed, in securing the attendance of witnesses. The faculty member or the faculty member’s counsel and the representative designated by the president should have the right, within reasonable limits, to question all witnesses who testify orally. The faculty member should have the opportunity to be confronted by all adverse witnesses. Where unusual and urgent reasons move the hearing committee to withhold this right, or where the witness cannot appear, the identity of the witness, as well as the statements of the witness, should nevertheless be disclosed to the faculty member. Subject to these safeguards, statements may, when necessary, be taken outside the hearing and reported to it. All of the evidence should be duly recorded. Unless special circumstances warrant, it should not be necessary to follow formal rules of court procedure.

6. Consideration by Hearing Committee. The committee should reach its decision in conference, on the basis of the hearing. Before doing so, it should give opportunity to the faculty member or the faculty member’s counsel and the representative designated by the president to argue orally before it. If written briefs would be helpful, the committee may request them. The committee may proceed to decision promptly, without having the record of the hearing transcribed, where it feels that a just decision can be reached by this means; or it may await the availability of a transcript of the hearing if its decision would be aided thereby. It should make explicit findings with respect to each of the grounds of removal presented, and a reasoned opinion may be desirable. Publicity concerning the committee’s decision may properly be withheld until consideration has been given to the case by the governing body of the institution. The president and the faculty member should be notified of the decision in writing and should be given a copy of the record of the hearing. Any release to the public should be made through the president’s office.

7. Consideration by Governing Body. The president should transmit to the governing body the full report of the hearing committee, stating its action. On the assumption that the governing board has accepted the principle of the faculty hearing committee, acceptance of the committee’s decision would normally be expected. If the governing body chooses to review the case, its review should be based on the record of the previous hearing, accompanied by opportunity for argument, oral or written or both, by the principals at the hearing or their representatives. The decision of the hearing committee should either be sustained or the proceeding be returned to the committee with objections specified. In such a case the committee should reconsider, taking account of the stated objections and receiving new evidence if necessary. It should frame its decision and communicate it in the same manner as before. Only after study of the committee’s reconsideration should the governing body make a final decision overruling the committee.

8. Publicity. Except for such simple announcements as may be required, covering the time of the hearing and similar matters, public statements about the case by either the faculty member or administrative officers should be avoided so far as possible until the proceedings have been completed. Announcement of the final decision should include a statement of the hearing committee’s original action, if this has not previously been made known.
Termination & Discipline (2004)

Faculty Termination & Disciplinary Issues
Presentation to 14th Annual Legal Issues in Higher Education Conference, University of Vermont
By Donna R. Euben, AAUP Counsel
October 24, 2004

I. The Status Of Faculty

There are three professions which are entitled to wear the gowns: the judge, the priest, and the scholar. This garment stands for its wearer’s maturity of mind, his independence of judgment, and his direct responsibility to his conscience and his God. It signifies the inner sovereignty of those three interrelated professions: they should be the very last to allow themselves to act under duress and yield to pressure . . . [T]he judges are the court, the ministers together with the faithful are the church, and the professors together with students are the university . . . they are those institutions themselves, and therefore have prerogative rights to and within their institution which aspiring, aspiring, and aspiring, and want to avoid at all costs.

Because faculty are the institution themselves, they should have a significant role in the governance of their academic institution. The faculty have primary responsibility for aspects of the educational process, such as curriculum and methods of instruction. See NLRB v. Yeshiva University, 444 U.S. 672 (1980) finding that professors at that particular university were managerial and therefore not covered by the National Labor Relations Act, and explaining that “the business of a university is education, and its vitality ultimately must depend on academic policies that are formulated and generally are implemented by faculty governance decisions” (see also AAUP, Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities, AAUP Policy Documents and Reports 217 (6th ed. 2001) (“Paidback”): “The faculty has primary responsibility for such fundamental areas as curriculum, subject matter and methods of instruction, research, faculty status, and those aspects of student life which relate to the educational process.”).

In light of those and other responsibilities, professors are not treated like most other employees. Faculty tend not to be “employees at will,” a term which denotes an employment relationship that lacks specific duration or protection from arbitrary dismissal. The appointment of an employee at will can be terminated for “bad reason, good reason, or no reason at all,” so long as the reason is not illegal. Rather, two types of legal employment relationships tend to exist between faculty and their institutions: continuous tenure and term contracts.

A. Tenured Faculty

Tenured appointments are ongoing, extending beyond the period indicated in the annual salary letter. Tenure is a presumption of competence and continuing service that can be overcome only if specified conditions are met.

The 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure (“1940 Statement”) and other AAUP policy documents, notably the Recommended Institutional Regulations (“RIR”), speak to the termination of tenured appointments. The 1940 Statement was formulated in conjunction with the Association of American Colleges (now called the Association of American Colleges andUniversities) and has been endorsed by over 180 professional and scholarly groups. “Probably because it was formulated by both administrators and professors, all of the secondary authorities seem to agree that the 1940 Statement is the most widely accepted academic definition of tenure.” Krookoff v. Goucher College, 589 F.2d 675, 676 (4th Cir. 1978). The 1940 Statement provides: “After the expiration of a probationary period, teachers . . . should have permanent or continuous tenure, and their service should be terminated only for adequate cause . . . or under extraordinary circumstances because of financial exigencies.”

Professor William Van Alstyne explains:

Tenure, accurately and unequivocally defined, lays no claim whatever to a guarantee of lifetime employment. Rather, tenure provides only that no person continuously retained as a full-time faculty member beyond a specified lengthy period of probationary service may thereafter be dismissed without adequate cause. . . . [T]enure is translatable as a statement of formal assurance that . . . the individual’s professional security and academic freedom will not be placed in question without the observance of full academic due process.

and Dismissal for Cause in Institutions of Higher Education 2 (College Administration Publications, 1996) ("Dismissal for Cause") ("Tenure is a protection against arbitrary dismissal which requires an institution to justify 'adequate' cause for the adverse employment decision.").

B. Faculty With Term Contracts

A large number of faculty members have "term contracts," which are generally for one semester or one year. Faculty members who have term contracts can include individuals on probation for tenure; visiting faculty; and strictly temporary part-time instructors. Such faculty ordinarily have a protected property right to continued employment during the life of their contract, and a concurrent right to due process protections if they are subject to dismissal during the period of their employment contract.

II. The Legal Employment Relationship Between Faculty And Administrations

The sources of legal protections for faculty—tenured and non-tenured—may be grounded in the U.S. Constitution, contractual obligations, state law, and academic custom.

A. Constitutional Law

The federal constitution was largely designed to regulate the exercise of governmental power only. Therefore, as a matter of law, the constitutional restrictions pertaining to due process apply to public employers, such as state colleges and universities, and do not generally limit private employers, such as private colleges, from infringing on professors' due process rights. However, the due process rights of faculty members at private institutions are often protected by contracts. (See below)

B. Contractual Obligations

Internal sources of contractual obligations for public and private sector institutions may include institutional rules and regulations, letters of appointment, faculty handbooks, and, where applicable, collective bargaining agreements. Grounds for dismissal and discipline as well as due process rights are often explicitly incorporated into faculty handbooks, which are sometimes held to be legally binding contracts. See, e.g., Greene v. Howard University, 412 F.2d 1128 (D.C. Cir. 1968) (holding faculty handbook to "govern the relationship between faculty members and the university"); American Ass'n of University Professors v. Bloomsfield College Chapter v. Bloomsfield College, 129 N.J. Super. 269, 252 (N.J. Super. Ct. Ch. Div. 1974). Appeal after remand, 346 A.2d 615 (N.J. Super. 1975) (finding faculty handbook "an essential part of the contractual terms governing the relationship between college and faculty"). See generally Faculty Handbooks As Enforceable Contracts: A State Guide (2nd ed.).

C. State Law

Some states have specific statutes applicable to public colleges and universities that address grounds for dismissal as well as due process protections. For example, a New Jersey statute provides: "No professor, associate professor, assistant professor, instructor, supervisor, registrar, teacher or other person employed in a teaching capacity in any State college, county college or industrial school who is under tenure during good behavior and efficiency shall be dismissed or subject to reduction of salary, except for inefficiency, incapacity, conduct unbecoming a teacher or other just cause." The statute provides for written charges, a hearing, the right to counsel, and the right to subpoena witnesses. N.J.S.A. 18:6A-18. See also Cohen v. Board of Trustees of University of Medicine & Dentistry of New Jersey, 867 F.2d 1455, 1460-61 (3rd Cir. 1988) (tenure contractual terms delineated in New Jersey statutes).

D. Academic Custom and Usage

Where documents are ambiguous, courts sometimes look to "academic custom," "academic usage" or "academic common law." The 1940 Statement constitutes a "professionally common" or customary law of academic freedom and tenure. "Towards a Law of Academic Status," 22 Buffalo L. Rev. 576, 577 (1972).

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Gressner v. Howard University observed:

Contracts are written, and are to be read, by reference to the norms of conduct and expectations founded upon them. This is especially true of contracts in and among a community of scholars, which is what a university is. The readings of the market place are not invariably apt in this nomenclature context.

413 F.2d at 1135. See also Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 601 (1972) (just as there may be a "common law of a particular industry or of a particular firm", so there may be an "unwritten common law in a particular university") so that even though no explicit tenure system exists, the college may "nonetheless . . . have created such a system in practice"); Brown v. Catholic University of America, 527 F.2d 843, 846 n. 8 (D.C. Cir. 1976) (finding that jointly issued statements of AAUP and other higher education organizations, such as the 1940 Statement, "represent widely shared norms within the academic community"); and, therefore, may be relied upon to interpret academic contracts); Kretzoff v. Goucher College, 585 F.2d 675, 678-79 (4th Cir. 1978) (academic custom and usage as demarcated by AAUP's 1940 Statement added an implied "financial exigency" limitation to the tenure contract).
III. Dismissal For Cause Of Faculty

One of the most contentious issues in higher education involves efforts to terminate the tenured appointments of faculty members and term appointments of faculty members before their expiration. In such situations, significant academic due process protections attach. Generally accepted dismissal procedures are delineated in the 1956 Statement on Procedural Standards in Faculty Dismissal Proceedings, which is discussed below.

Dismissal is different from nonappointment and nonrenewal. Nonappointment and nonrenewal involve not retaining a tenured faculty member beyond the expiration of the current term of appointment. Generally accepted procedural protections for nonrenewed faculty are set forth in AAUP's Statement on Procedural Standards in the Renewal or Nonrenewal of Faculty Appointments, which is discussed further below.

Distinguishing between dismissal and nonrenewal is critical in determining what, if any, due process protections attach. A Virginia Supreme Court case, Fun v. Virginia Military Institute, 437 S.E.2d 181 (Va. 1993), highlights the importance of using these terms correctly. In Fun, the administration's letter to a faculty member notified him that his appointment would not be renewed but, in so doing, made "no reference to nonrenewal, but [referred] instead to 'regulations for dismissal.' " The court found a question of fact existed about whether the nonrenewed professor was legally entitled to the due process procedures for dismissed faculty. As a legal matter, absent evidence of illegal discrimination or violation of protected constitutional rights or failure to follow contractual obligations, the nonrenewal of a faculty member's appointment does not usually trigger legal due process protections.

A. What is "Just Cause"?

Adequate cause has been defined as:

- a basis on which a faculty member, either with academic tenure or during a term appointment, may be dismissed. The term refers especially to demonstrated incompetence or dishonesty in teaching or research, to substantial and manifest neglect of duty, and to personal conduct which substantially impairs the individual's fulfillment of his institutional responsibilities.

Faculty Tenure: Commission on Academic Tenure 250 (Keest, ed., 1978) ("Faculty Tenure").

While AAUP provides extensive advice on the procedural protections to be afforded faculty who face dismissal for cause, the identification of the substantive grounds for the dismissal of faculty is left primarily to individual campuses. The 1956 Statement observes:

One persistent source of difficulty is the definition of adequate cause for the dismissal of a faculty member. Despite the 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure, and subsequent attempts to build upon it, considerable ambiguity and misunderstanding persist throughout higher education, especially in respective conceptions of governing boards, administrative officers, and faculties concerning this matter. The present statement assumes that individual institutions will have formulated their own definitions of adequate cause for dismissal, bearing in mind the 1940 Statement and standards which have developed in the experience of academic institutions.

An influential scholar explains AAUP policy:

[The] particular standards of 'adequate cause' to which the tenured faculty is accountable are themselves wholly within the province of each university to determine through its own published rules, save only that those rules not be applied in a manner which violates the academic freedom or the ordinary personal civil liberties of the individual. An institution may provide for dismissal for 'adequate cause' arising from failure to meet a specified norm of performance or productivity, as well as from specified acts of affirmative misconduct. In short, there is not now and never has been a claim that tenure insulates any faculty member from a fair accounting of his professional responsibilities within the institution, which courts upon his service.

Bar 5(a) acknowledges that "adequate cause" is an appropriate standard under which to dismiss faculty so long as it is "related, directly and substantially, to the fitness of faculty members in their professional capacities as teachers or researchers." See AAUP "Academic Freedom and Tenure: University of Virginia," Academic Freedom and the American Association of University Professors 60 (Nov.-Dec., 1991) (deciding that complaints against professor, which involved mishandling of research funds, were "related, directly and substantially" to his fitness in his professional capacity as a researcher) ("Academic"). The 1940 Statement provides that tenured faculty members whose appointments are terminated for cause will receive at least one year of notice or seven-twelfths salary unless the grounds for dismissal involve moral turpitude.

The concept of moral turpitude identifies the exceptional case in which the professor may be denied a year's teaching or pay in whole or in part. The statement applies to that kind of behavior which goes beyond simply unwarranting discharge and is so utterly blameworthy as to make it inappropriate to require the offering of a year's teaching or pay. The standard is not that the moral sensibilities of persons in the particular community have been affronted. The standard is behavior that would evoke condemnation by the academic community generally.
Neglect of duty, which is sometimes alleged to constitute insubordination, involves the failure of faculty members to carry out their professional obligations. As numerous courts have noted, definitions of these terms in the higher education context are “rather maverick.” See Botts v. Shepherd College, 506 F.2d 456 (W. Va. 2002). See, e.g., Stearns v. Board of Trustees of Central Wash. Univ., 647 P.2d 496 (Wash. App. 1982) (upholding termination of tenured faculty member for unsupervised leaves of absence, including a trip to Israel during the beginning of the semester, after repeated “oral grants of absences,” because professor’s conduct “directly related substantially” to his fitness as a faculty member); McConnell v. Howard University, 816 F.2d 58 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (remanding case for further proceedings in breach-of-contract action by professor who challenged his dismissal for “neglect of professional responsibilities”); Preble v. Brockport, 530 F.2d 992 (10th Cir. 1976) (upholding dismissal of tenured faculty member for neglect of duty, which involved professor’s failure to teach eight days of scheduled classes in one semester). But see Trumble v. Southern West Virginia Community and Technical College, 549 S.E.2d 294 (W. Va. App. 2001) (finding that administration violated West Virginia constitution when it “immediately terminated . . . a tenured public higher education teacher, who has a previously unblemished record . . . for an incident of insubordination that is minor in its consequences,” specifically the professor’s failure to submit his syllabus using new campus software”). See generally Annotation, “What Constitutes ‘Insubordination’ as Grounds for Dismissal of Public School Teachers,” 78 ALR 3rd 68 (1977 & Supp. 2003).

3. Incompetence

Efforts to dismiss faculty for incompetence generally rely heavily on the evaluations of peers in determining whether a professor is no longer competent to carry out his or her duties. AUP policy provides that in pre-termination hearings involving dismissals for incompetence, “the testimony will include that of qualified faculty members from this or other institutions of higher education.” RPR 5 (XII), Redbook at 27. See, e.g., Rogge v. Board of Trustees of Ball State University, 489 N.E.2d 616 (Ind. Ct. App. 1986) (upholding dismissal where professor failed to cover relevant topics in the course syllabus, organized lectures poorly, failed to attend class regularly, and failed to provide students the opportunities to meet with him one-on-one); King v. University of Minnesota, 774 F.2d 294 (8th Cir. 1985) (upholding dismissal of tenured faculty member based, in part, on the evaluations of colleagues and consecutive department chair about his poor teaching, research and service, that he often had teaching assistant substitute teach, and that he failed to grade 16 of 22 students in one course).

4. Ethical Misconduct

AUP’s Statement on Professional Ethics provides that faculty should “avoid any exploitation, harassment, or discriminatory treatment of students,” and that “professors do not discriminate or harass colleagues. They respect and defend the free inquiry of associates.” Redbook at 133-34. See, e.g., Korf v. Ball State University, 726 F.2d 1227 (7th Cir. 1984) (upholding dismissal of faculty member for violation of professional ethics based on AUP’s statement); Filippo v. Bangiavvani, 963 F.2d 1123 (3rd Cir. 1992) (upholding dismissal by Rutgers University of a tenured chemistry professor, relying in part on the university’s adoption of AUP’s professional ethics statement to find the professor had “exploited, frightened and been abusive” to “visiting Chinese scholars brought to the University to work with him on research projects”); Yao v. Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin System, 648 N.W.2d 365 (Wis. App. 2000) (upholding board’s decision to dismiss professor for “intentionally tampering with a colleague’s laboratory materials”).

C. Procedural Protections in a Dismissal for Cause

1. Due Process under the Law

Tenured appointments or appointments with fixed terms are entitled to due process legal protections in public colleges and universities. Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564 (1972); Board of Regents v. Board of Regents, 464 U.S. 183 (1982). The U.S. Supreme Court in Roth, 408 U.S. at 564, spoke to the property interests of faculty members:

Property interests, of course, are not created by the Constitution. Rather they are created and their dimensions are defined by existing rules or understandings that stem from an independent source such as state law—rules or understandings that secure certain benefits and support claims of entitlement to those benefits.

When an institution’s decision implicates property interests, constitutional due process provides for certain procedural safeguards before a final decision, specifically notice and an opportunity to be heard. Cleveland Bd. of Educ. v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 546 (1985). Due process protections at private institutions are often dictated by contract and, in some instances, state law.

The extent of legal due process required to faculty members tends to vary by jurisdiction, including the degree to which a formal pre-termination hearing is legally required. See generally The Law of Higher Education at 288-295. One federal appellate court set forth its view as to minimum legal procedural safeguards in the academy:

Three safeguards may include: (1) written notice of the grounds for termination; (2) disclosure of the evidence supporting termination; (3) the right to confront witnesses; (4) an opportunity to be heard in person and to present witnesses and documentary evidence; (5) a neutral and detached hearing body; and (6) a written statement of the fact finders as to the evidence relied upon.

Chung v. Park, 514 F.2d 382 (3rd Cir. 1975); See also Lecht v. University of Texas at El Paso, 759 F.2d 1224, 1227-28 (5th Cir. 1985) (a hearing should be before "a tribunal that possesses some academic expertise and apparent impartiality toward the charges"). But see Hulen v. Yates, 322 F.3d 1229 (10th Cir. 2003) (ruling that professor’s due process rights were not violated when he received no “formal [evidentiary] hearing” before “being laterally transferred” to a different academic department, because the Tenth Circuit interprets Lingle v. NLRB as providing for “not very stringent” pre-termination hearings”); McNiel v. Fossil, 88 F.3d 446 (3rd Cir. 1996) (ruling that due process rights afforded to tenured professor need not follow all six steps in Chung v. Park before termination of tenured appointment).

Dismissed faculty members often challenge their dismissal on procedural grounds. Accordingly, administrators at public institutions would be well advised to provide more (Chung) not fewer (McNiel) procedural protections, not only because greater due process often ensures a more considered decision, but also because affording such procedural protections communicates to courts that significant due process protections were afforded and that, therefore, the internal decision should be respected. See The Law of Higher Education at 175-78 (Supp. 2000).

Faculty participation in dismissal procedures often helps institutions defend their dismissal decisions in court. In McConnell v. Howard University, 819 F.2d 58 (D.C. Cir. 1987), the federal appellate court remanded a dismissal case for further examination of “neglect of professional responsibilities,” finding that the administration’s dismissal decision was suspicious because, in part, it rejected the faculty committee’s determination in favor of the professor. The faculty committee had found that while failure to teach an assigned course might justify dismissal, mitigating circumstances in this case—the failure of the administration to deal with a disruptive student—dictated otherwise. See also Davis v. Spaneberg, 547 F.2d 335 (8th Cir. 1976) (faculty committee rejected professor’s argument that his failure to report and account for research funds was a protest of the university’s accounting policy, and the federal district court relied on that faculty committee decision to affirm the professor’s dismissal); Filippo v. Bongiovanni, 961 F.2d 1135 (3rd Cir. 1992) (report of faculty committee, which found professor to have violated AAUP’s ethics statement, relied on by court in upholding institution’s decision to dismiss tenured faculty member).

NOTE: Constitutional due process protections would not generally attach to the nonrenewal of a faculty member’s contract, unless, for example, proper notice is not provided. See, e.g., Greene v. Howard Univ., 412 F.2d 1128 (D.C. Cir. 1969) (ruling that failure to provide timely notice of nonrenewal meant that administration was required to establish just cause for the termination of an appointment because the faculty member had a legitimate expectation of another annual contract); Sand v. Board of Trustees of University of Tennessee, 513 F.2d 547 (6th Cir. 1975) (ruling that a nonrenewed noncontingent professor of mathematics had a property interest because he had been told that he could expect his contract to be renewed and he had exercised voting and retirement plan privileges).

2. Academic Due Process

AAUP recognizes that “[t]he governing board of an institution of higher education in the United States operates, with few exceptions, as the final institutional authority.” Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities, Redbook at 217, 220; see also 1996 Statement, Redbook at 13-14 (acknowledging that board of trustees has final decision-making authority regarding dismissal of faculty). Nevertheless, faculty are generally regarded as having a primary role to play in determining faculty status, including dismissal. See Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities, Redbook at 221.

The concept of “academic due process” entails more than the legal barebone procedural requirements described above. Academic due process, an internal institutional procedure, is to be distinguished from due process of law. Faculty Tenure at 253-56. Academic due process is “a system of procedures designed to produce the best possible judgments in those personnel problems of higher education which may yield a serious adverse decision about a teacher.” Joughin, “Academic Due Process,” Academic Freedom: The Scholar’s Place in Modern Society 146 (Oceana Publications 1964); see also Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities, Redbook at 217, 218 (“[A] joint action [with administration and faculty] should also govern dismissals . . .”). One court opined that “[t]he serious consequences of a ‘just cause’ dismissal are one reason why university regulations prescribe a rigorous process when accusations . . . are made.” Yen, 919 N.W.2d 356.

As one scholar observed:

Tenure is transmissible principally as a statement of formal assurance that thereafter the individual’s professional security and academic freedom will not be placed in question without the observance of full academic due process. This accompanying complement of academic due process merely establishes that a fairly rigorous procedure will be observed whenever formal complaint is made that dismissal is justified on some stated ground of professional impropriety . . .

AAUP policy encompasses the following components of academic due process: a statement of charges in reasonable particularity; opportunity for a hearing before a faculty hearing board; the right of counsel if desired; the right to present evidence and to cross-examine; record of the hearing; and opportunity to the governing board.

The 1958 Statement, which was jointly drafted and approved by AAUP and AASCU and has been incorporated into hundreds of faculty handbooks, observes that it is "a necessary precondition of a strong faculty that it have first-hand concern with its own membership," including the appointment, promotion, and dismissal of their colleagues. At the same time, "[t]he faculty must be willing to recommend the dismissal of a colleague when necessary."

The 1958 Statement further provides that "[t]he faculty member should have the option of assistance by counsel . . ." Redbook at 13. Please note that the law may vary by jurisdiction about the right to have legal representation at a termination hearing. See, e.g., Frumkin v. Board of Trustees, 626 F.2d 19 (6th Cir. 1980) (allowing counsel to be present and advise, but prohibiting counsel from cross-examining witnesses); Chen v. Miami Univ., 625 N.E.2d 644, 649 (Ohio 1993) ("The right to be heard would be, in many cases, of little avail if it did not comprehend the right to be heard by counsel. Even the intelligent and educated layman has small and sometimes no skills in the science of the law.").

In 2001, an AAUP investigating committee concluded that the University of Virginia administration had violated the academic due process rights of a tenured professor who had raised research funds. The AAUP found:

Professor McCarthy was afforded no opportunity to respond to each action in 1998 before [the discipline] was imposed on him, and the administration did not consult with faculty members before it acted as it did. He was dismissed without adequate cause having been demonstrated by the administration before a faculty body. He received no reversionary salary. The opportunity for a postdismissal hearing could not substitute for an appropriate [pre-dismissal] academic proceeding, and, in any event, would have wrongly required Professor McCarthy to carry the burden of proof.

AAUP's Statement on Procedural Standards in the Renewal or Nonrenewal of Faculty Appointments provides guidance on appropriate academic due process protections for non tenured faculty. The statement explains that non tenured faculty "cannot . . . be dismissed before the end of a term appointment except for adequate cause that has been demonstrated through academic due process—a right they share with tenured members of the faculty." In such situations, the administration should provide the faculty member with adequate notice of nonappointment with, upon request, a written explanation for the decision, and the opportunity to appeal the decision to a faculty body on grounds that the decision was based upon an impermissible consideration or inadequate consideration.

IV. Sanctions Less Than Dismissal For Cause

The notion of "progressive discipline" is not a term that one sees in many faculty handbooks. But see Trumbull v. West Virginia Board of Directors, 549 S.E. 2d 294 (W. Va. 2001) (college should have fired tenured professor before resorting to other progressive disciplinary measures under West Virginia constitution). Nevertheless, there are sanctions less severe than dismissal that may be appropriate in dealing with particular faculty matters that do not rise to just cause. The Commission on Academic Tenure observed in 1973 that it was manifestly insufficient to have a disciplinary system which assumes that only those offenses which warrant dismissal should be considered serious. Faculty members are from time to time guilty of offenses of lesser gravity. There should be a way of recognizing these and imposing appropriate sanctions. And it is equally insufficient to make do only with disciplinary procedures designed for capital offenses. Simpler procedures—though assuring due process in the particular context—are obviously required for offenses for which sanctions short of dismissal are contemplated.

Faculty Tenure at 76. Accordingly, the commission recommended as follows:

[That each institution develop and adopt an enumeration of sanctions short of dismissal that may be applied in cases of demonstrated irresponsibility or professional misconduct for which some penalty short of dismissal should be imposed. These sanctions and the due-process procedures for complaint, hearing, judgment, and appeal should be developed initially by joint faculty-administrative action.

Id.

Some institutions have clear policies that cover sanctions other than dismissal, such as those at Michigan State University, "Policy and Procedure for Implementing Disciplinary Action Where Dismissal Is Not Sought," (Disciplinary action may include but is not limited to: reprimand, suspension with or without
A. AAUP Policy

In 1971, a special joint subcommittee of the AAUP considered the question of sanctions short of dismissal, and enumerated the following lesser sanctions:

1. oral reprimand,
2. written reprimand,
3. a recorded reprimand,
4. restitution (for instance, payment for damage due to individuals or to the institution),
5. loss of prospective benefits for a stated period for instance, suspension of "regular" or "inert" increase in salary or suspension of promotion eligibility,
6. a fine, (7) reduction in salary for a stated period,
7. suspension from service for a stated period, without other prejudice.

Faculty Tenure at 75-77.

AAUP RRR 7 distinguishes between "major" and "minor" sanctions, categorizing suspension as major and reprimand as minor. AAUP regulations 5 and 7 provide that major sanctions should not be imposed until after a hearing in which the same procedures apply as in a dismissal case, which include written notice of the charges, a hearing before a faculty committee in which the administration bears the burden of proof, right to counsel, cross-examination of adverse witnesses, a record of the hearing, and a written decision. Redbook at 27. Immediate suspension with pay, pending a hearing, is appropriate under AAUP policy if an individual poses a threat of immediate harm to him or herself or others. RRR 5(c)(1), Redbook at 25. Moreover, Regulation 6(c) of the Association's Recommended Institutional Regulations states that the administration, before suspending a faculty member, will consult with an appropriate faculty committee concerning the "propriety, the length, and other conditions of the suspension."

The AAUP further provides that an institution may impose a minor sanction after providing the individual notice, and that the individual professor has the right to seek review by a faculty committee if he or she feels that a sanction was unjustly imposed.

B. Case Law

Below are some higher education faculty cases involving sanctions, excluding dismissal. As noted above, like the legal claims of faculty threatened with dismissal, litigation arising from the imposition of sanctions flows from a number of legal sources, including the constitutional law for public institutions, contractual obligations at private and public sector institutions (faculty handbooks, letters of appointment, collective bargaining agreements), and regulations and statutes (internal and external).

1. Warning or Reprimand

In Helf v. Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning, 712 So.2d 912 (Miss. 1998), the University of Mississippi issued a written reprimand to a non-tenured professor of medicine who had violated the student's privacy. The Mississippi Supreme Court ruled that the written reprimand did not violate the professor's due process rights, but required that the document be maintained in a separate file. Butts v. Shepherd College, 569 S.E.2d 458 (W. Va. 2002) (holding that professor's refusal to obey supervisor's order to release student grades to supervisor was not grounds for reprimand); Powlas v. Ross, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3601 (W.D. Wn., Feb. 27, 2004) (rejecting professor's defamation claim arising in part from recommendation of administrator that chancellor issue "a strong letter of reprimand" and place it in professor's personnel file). See also AAUP, "Academic Freedom and Tenure: Tulane University," AAUP Bulletin 424, 430 (1970) (acknowledging faculty committee's recommendation as proper for reprimand as opposed to dismissal for professor's interference with on-campus ROTC drill).

2. Public Censure

See, e.g., Newman v. Uphoff, 930 F.2d 695 (1st Cir. 1991) (upholding the public censure of a faculty member for plagiarism by the University of Massachusetts, Boston administration after an investigation and hearing by a faculty committee), but see Brocher v. Northern Kentucky University, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11404 (E.D. Ky., July 22, 1998) (holding that departmental censure of faculty member in response to his comments to the media about a controversial university art exhibit provided a basis for professor's First Amendment retaliation claim, and noting that the censure could affect the professor's "ability to engage in the department's system of governance; [to] participate[] in departmental decision-making; and [to] teach[]... his teaching assignments"); Meister v. Regents of the University of California, 78 Cal.Rptr.2d 913 (Cal. App. 6 Dist., 1999) (finding by arbitrator that professor's reputation had been injured by circulation of letter of censure, which was recommended by campus committee, for the professor's unauthorized circulation of a confidential planning document).

3. Departmental Reassignment
On occasion an institution decides to transfer a faculty member from one academic department to another where significant problems exist in the former department, and the faculty member has claimed that the transfer amounts to a sanction that should not have been affected without due process. Huang v. Board of Governors of University of North Carolina, 902 F.2d 1134 (4th Cir. 1990) (upholding transfer of tenured professor from one department to another, and finding no property interest in a particular position); Adelphi v. Martin, 868 F.2d 1444 (11th Cir. 1988) (noting University’s professors’ property interests not violated when engineering professors were transferred from mechanical engineering to other engineering departments with no reduction in salary or rank); but see Nolen v. Yatsy, 322 F.3d 1229 (10th Cir. 2003) (stating that professor “had a property interest in his departmental assignment based upon the terms and conditions of his appointment” and therefore basic due process attached to his transfer from one academic department to another).

4. Actions on Salary for Disciplinary Reasons

a. One-time denial of a salary increase. Depending on the facts and circumstances, AAUP might view a one-time denial of a salary increase to be a minor sanction. See, e.g., Harrington v. Hents, 118 F.3d 369 (8th Cir. 1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1015 (1997) (denial of pay increases to white law professors did not constitute adverse employment action); Winstead v. Regents of the University of Colorado, 739 F. Supp. 501 (D. Colo. 1990), aff’d, 945 F.2d 412 (10th Cir. 1991) (table), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 999 (1992) (university did not violate tenure professor’s rights by denying her a merit increase when she refused to distribute standardized teaching evaluation forms to her class on academic freedom grounds). But see Power v. Summer, 226 F.3d 815 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that administration violated the First Amendment rights of three professors by awarding them merit increases of only $400 instead of $1,000 because they were outspoken on issues of faculty salaries). For a discussion of the Vincennes University case, see Donna R. Euben, “Judicial Forays Into Merit Pay?,” 89 Academe 70 (July-Aug. 2003).

b. Long-term salary increase denial. See, e.g., Vaughn v. Sibley, 705 So.2d 482 (Ala. Civ. App. 1997) (finding that University of Alabama at Birmingham violated the rights of an associate professor of mathematics by denying him any salary increase from 1982 through at least 1994 (and maybe 1997, the date of the court decision), because the administration either had to follow its salary policy and pay the professor the minimum salary, or it had to file an exception to exclude him from the established salary range).

c. Salary Reduction. See, e.g., Williams v. Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, 6 F.3d 290 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1194 (1994) (tenured professor said, claiming that he should have been provided a hearing before the medical school reduced his compensation from $68,000 to $46,600 because he failed to generate as much grant money as had been expected; court ruled that the professor’s interest in a specific salary level did not outweigh the administration’s interest in making budgetary decisions for educational programs, and that the professor had received six-months’ notice and the opportunity to seek additional funding). For a discussion of efforts to reduce salaries in medical schools, see Donna R. Euben, “Doctors In Court? Salary Reduction Litigation”, 86 Academe 77 (Nov.-Dec. 1999). State law may permit salary reduction. As previously noted, state law governing the salaries of public employees may provide particular protections. For example, a New Jersey statute provides that no tenure professor in a public college may be “subject to reduction of salary, except for inefficiency, incapacity, conduct unbecoming a teacher or other just cause.” N.J.S.A. 18A:9-18.

5. Finns or Restitution.

An administration might seek reimbursement, restitution, or a fine from a faculty member. Please note that such fines may raise issues under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

5. Suspension

There are a variety of suspensions, including paid suspensions, unpaid suspensions, and immediate (paid and unpaid) suspensions.

a. Paid Suspensions. See, e.g., Edwards v. California University of Pennsylvania, 166 F.3d 488 (3rd Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1143 (1995) (while tenured professor was being investigated for the use of inappropriate language in the classroom, he was suspended with pay; court found that suspension did not violate his constitutional rights).

b. Unpaid Suspensions. For the AAUP, a suspension pending a faculty hearing should be with pay. If an administration instead of moving to dismiss a faculty member, intends to suspend with or without pay; that action should be preceded by a hearing with the same procedural protections as afforded in a dismissal case. See, e.g., Bennett v. Lowenso, 21 F.3d 800 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 951 (2001) (Delacombe Community College professor initially put on leave without pay while sexual harassment investigation pending; he was later put on indefinite leave with pay); Silver v. University of New Hampshire, 808 F. Supp. 293 (D.N.H. 1994) (involving professor who was suspended without pay for one year for violating institution’s sexual harassment policy; the trial court ruled that professor was entitled to preliminary injunction on his First Amendment and due process claims).

c. Immediate Suspensions. AAUP’s IRR 5 provides that an institution may suspend a professor when immediate harm to the individual or others is threatened pending an ultimate determination of the individual’s status. HR 5 further provides that, before suspending a faculty member, the administration should consult with a faculty committee concerning the propriety, length, and other conditions of the suspension. The threat of physical harm can certainly warrant suspension, but so can harm to the educational process (e.g., a faculty member refuses to evaluate the work of most of her students). Such suspensions should be with pay, and they can remain in effect during an investigation and disciplinary proceedings. In Gilbert v. State Straubinga University, 525 U.S. 924 (1997), the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that due process rights were not violated when an administration suspended a tenured public employee without pay and failed to provide a pre-suspension hearing. This Court’s reasoning was based, in part, that drug-related felony charges were pending against the police officer. As commentators have noted, the Gilbert decision is not generally applicable to the due process protections afforded suspended faculty members. "[u]nless a college could demonstrate that it needed to remove a tenured faculty member quickly because he or she was a potential threat to the health or safety of others, or because the faculty member had committed some act that rendered him or her unfit to continue teaching pending a disciplinary hearing," the Law of Higher Education 175-80 (Sapp, 2000).

7. "Demotion" in Rank

The AAUP (generally) views reductions in faculty rank, such as from associate to assistant professor, as an inappropriate sanction, except in situations where the promotion is obtained by fraud or dishonesty. Compare Kirschenbaum v. Northwestern University, 728 NE.2d 752 (Ohio App. Ct. 1999) (finding that administration did not breach medical professor’s tenure contract when it changed his status from "full-time" to "contingent services") with Klapa v. Ithaca College, 167 Misc. 2d 498 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1995), aff’d 682 N.Y.S.2d 377 (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) (ruled that factual issue for jury existed regarding whether tenure breach for professor who was found guilty of plagiarizing when he was demoted from full to associate professor, his salary reduced, and his academic duties restricted).

8. Modified Teaching Assignments

Some institutions modify teaching assignments as a form of discipline. See, e.g., McCollum v. Board of Regents of the State University, 921 S.W.2d 684 (Tex. 1996) (stripping professor for three years from teaching the only section of a required course after he made inappropriate sexual comments to female students about EXOs). But see Leventhal v. Salatyn, 154 F.3d 389 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that professor was "effectively deprived of a property interest in a job" by university decision to forbid professor from seeing patients and an assignment of reviewing old medical files). Please note that "shadow sections"—courses taught by other instructors to compensate for perceived problems in the teaching of the original professor—may violate a public university professor’s constitutionally protected interests. See, e.g., Levine v. Harleston, 775 F. Supp. 895 (S.D.N.Y. 1991), aff’d, 950 F.2d 86 (2d Cir. 1990).

9. Class Monitoring

If periodic monitoring is deemed necessary discipline, primary responsibility should be in the hands of faculty.

10. Mandatory Counseling

Some administrations have required that faculty undergo counseling. Generally such discipline implicates a number of legal concerns, including free expression, academic freedom, and privacy. See, e.g., Baus v. Sampson, 261 F.3d 775 (9th Cir. 2001) (community college violated rights of outspoken professor by requiring him to meet with anger management counselor); Cohen v. San Bernardino Valley College, 92 F.3d 968 (9th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1140 (1997) (English professor who used explicit sexual imagery in class ordered to attend sexual harassment seminar). Silva v. University of New Hampshire, 969 F. Supp. 293 (D.N.H. 1994) (English professor who was found guilty of sexual harassment was suspended from teaching for one year and required to obtain a "counseling evaluation" and, if prescribed, attend counseling); Powell v. Ryan, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3601 (W.D. Wash., Feb. 27, 2004) (rejecting professor’s defamation claim arising in part from recommendation that professor attend sexual harassment training to identify his "problem areas"). See generally Jonathan Knight, “The Misuse of Mandatory Counseling,” the Chronicle of Higher Education (Nov. 17, 1995) ("No single punishment is appropriate for all sexual harassment cases, but it is the faculty member’s misconduct, not his ideas, that should be punished . . .").

V. Practical Suggestions

- When faced with a "problem professor," consider a range of sanctions, not only dismissal.
- Focus on misconduct, not opinions or speech or popularity of faculty member.
- Explore informal resolutions if at all feasible; a negotiated settlement may serve all parties’ interests.
- Ensure that faculty committees consider all faculty disciplinary issues. As noted earlier, such faculty participation provides further evidence to courts that due process was afforded and may encourage them to defer to the institution’s decision.
- When moving to dismiss faculty, apply policies is a consistent and non-discriminatory fashion, and observe all notice and severance pay requirements.
- Follow institutional policies carefully to ensure the provision of adequate due process protections to faculty members designated for discipline or dismissal.
- Advise faculty committees on their role in handling faculty discipline.
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS FACULTY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Committee Structure:
• Six members total
• Five representatives from A&S and one from CPS
• Of the A&S Representatives
  o At least one must be an active member of AAC
  o At least one must teach regularly for Holt
• Two year terms
• No more than one member from any department

Committee Member Selection:
• A&S representatives selected through an open call for nominations and vote by A&S faculty
• CPS representatives selected through an open call for nominations and vote by CPS faculty

Committee Responsibilities:
• Three-four meetings per semester
• Some discussion/feedback via email, particularly over the summer months
• Advise and assist the Director of International Programs in the following areas:
  o Strategic planning for study abroad/away
  o Development of new semester and summer programs
  o Review and selection of field study/summer programs for the following academic year
• NOTE: if any committee members are proposing a program, they are recused from this process and IP will replace that member with a past committee member for the review and selection process.
  o Curriculum integration
  o Selection of Shanghai semester program faculty o Academic policies involving or affecting study abroad/away
  o Training for faculty program leaders
  o Workshops on the pedagogy of field experiences and intercultural learning
  o Broad assessment of student learning on study abroad/away
  o Policies or processes that impact or involve faculty such as compensation for study abroad, proposal process for new programs etc.

2014-2015 Membership:
• Holt/A&S: Jana Matthews (through 7/15)
• CPS: Jim McLaughlin (through 7/15)
• A&S: Jonathan Walz (through 7/16)
• A&S: Martina Vidovic (through 7/16)
• A&S/AAC: Phil Deaver (through 7/17)
• A&S/AAC: Anca Voicu (through 7/17)

2013-2014 Membership:
• A&S: Pedro Bernal (through 7/14)
• A&S: Nancy Decker (through 7/14)
• Holt/A&S: Jana Matthews (through 7/15)
• CPS: Jim McLaughlin (through 7/15)
• A&S: Jonathan Walz (through 7/16)
• A&S: Martina Vidovic (through 7/16)

There should be a statement on the website indicating that these are open meetings, and the schedule should be available in accordance with open meeting policy.
